5. Entries by Collector—Land Registration Act (Bengal Act VII of 1876), s. 55—Entry in register, effect of—Question of possession. Entries made under Bengal Act VII of 1876 by the Collector, recording the names of proprietors of revenue-paying estates, are not evidence, under s. 35 of the Evidence Act, of the fact of proprietorship. That section relates to the class of cases where a public officer has to enter in a register or other book some actual fact which is known to him, e.g., the fact of a death or a marriage. The entry by the Collector in the register under Bengal Act VII of 1876 is not, properly speaking, the entry of a fact. It is a statement that the person is entitled to the property; it is the record of a right, not of a fact. PER GARTH, C.J.—Semble. That s. 55 of Bengal Act VII of 1876 constitutes the Collector a competent Court under particular circumstances for determining as between two disputants the question of possession, and his recorded decision upon that question in the register might be evidence of the fact of possession as between those two parties. *Ram Bishan Mahto v. When a document is so old that the parties to it and the witnesses are in all probability dead, and evidence cannot be produced to prove the factum of its execution, the rule in England, as well as in this country, is to compel the party who relies upon the document to show that it comes from the custody in which it would

Although ancient documents are admissible in evidence on proof that they have been produced from proper custody, their value as evidence when admitted must depend in each case upon the corroboration derivable from external circumstances, e.g., from the documents having been produced on previous occasions upon which they would naturally have been produced if in existence at the time or from acts having been done under them. *BOIKUNT NATH KUNDU v. After his death, his gomasta (agent) managed it for and on behalf of B's minor son C. In 1881 C filed a suit to redeem a house and a garden, part of the property covered by the varaspatra, and which had been mortgaged by A's husband in 1831. One of the defences to this suit was that neither C nor his father was the heir of the original mortgagor, and that therefore C could not redeem the property in dispute. At the trial C produced the varaspatra of 1847 in support of his title, alleging that he had found it among the papers of the old gomasta of his father, who used to look after his affairs during his minority. Heli, that the varaspatra was admissible in evidence under s. 90 of the Evidence Act (I of 1872) as a document purporting to be more than thirty years old, and produced from a custody which, under the circumstances of the case, was a proper custody, the possession of the gomasta being legally the possession of his master. The degree of credit to be given to an ancient document depends chiefly on the proof of transactions or state of affairs necessarily or at least properly or naturally referable to it. HARI CHINTAMAN DIKSHIT v. 12. ———— Ancient document, presumption as to—Genuineness of signature in issue—Presumption not excluded, but has to be rebutted. It is in the discretion of a Court whether it will raise the presumption in favour of a document for which s. 90 of the Evidence Act provides, but this discretion is not to be exercised arbitrarily: it must be governed by principles which are consonant with law and justice. And while, on the one hand, great care is requisite in applying the presumption, on the other hand, it is clear that very great injustice may be perpetrated if an ancient document coming from proper custody is refuted by a Court capriciously or for inadequate reasons. When the genuineness of a document purporting to be an ancient document is put in issue, it appears to have been sometimes thought that any presumption in its favour is thereby excluded, but this would deprive the party producing it of the benefit of the presumption precisely in the circumstances in which he most stands in need of it and. The presumption merely takes the place of the evidence which would, where a modern document is concerned, be necessary for the purpose of proving due execution, and it must be met and rebutted in the same way as direct evidence of execution in the case of a modern document. *Phool Bibee v. The dispute being ultimately referred to an arbitrator, the latter by his award, dated 21st February 1888, divided the estate amongst the "heirs and legatees" of the testator amongst whom he included his son A, who according to the concurrent findings of the Courts in Burma, had not been heard of since 1870. In the present suit the only son of A claimed a share in the estate in right of his father under the arbitrator's award. The Courts in Burma dismissed the suit holding that the plaintiff had failed to discharge the burden, to the terms of his award. The agreement of reference was not produced and there was nothing to show that A was a party to it. Moreover, the arbitrator was not examined as a witness: Held, that the proceedings in arbitration were of no value in proving the plaintiff's case, the reserving of a

The fact that in the present case there was a son in existence, besides the illegitimate son, made no difference, in principle, between this case and the cases already decided. Held, also, that plaintiff was entitled to maintenance. An illegitimate member of a family, who is not entitled to inherit, can be allowed only a compassionate rate of maintenance and cannot claim maintenance on the same principles and on the same scale as disqualified heirs and females, who have become members of the family by marriage. 2. ——— s. 114 (b)—Evidence of accomplice—Necessity for corroboration. The case against an accused, who was tried on a charge of murder, depended entirely upon the evidence of the first witness, who deposed that he had worked for accused prior to and at the date of the murder; that the woman, whom accused was charged with murdering, had also worked for accused, and had become enceinte by him; that she had frequently demanded money of accused and at last threatened to disgrace him, if he did not pay her; that on the evening of the murder accused obtained a crow-bar from the witness, and later on went to where the deceased was sleeping, when the witness heard a cry, and, on secretly approaching the spot, saw accused strike the deceased on the head with a crow-bar; that witness then ran away; that accused called him; that he went to the spot, and accused asked him to put the body in an empty pit some distance off; that witness refused to help, whereupon accused dragged the body to the pit and threw it in; that next morning accused threatened to murder the witness, if he mentioned what had happened; that some fifteen days later, after a quarrel with accused, witness ran away and gave information to the brother of the deceased woman and then to the police, who with some villagers were taken by witness to the pit where the body was found and, subsequently, identified. The witness stated that he had not given information earlier because he was afraid. The only evidence adduced in corroboration of any part of this witness's evidence was that the brother and sister of the deceased had heard of the relations between accused and the deceased, that the body was found in the pit, and that death was shown to have been caused at about the time and place stated by the first witness, by fracture of the skull, which might have been caused by a blow from a crow-bar. On its being contended on behalf of the accused, that the first witness was an accomplice, or, if not an accomplice in the strict sense of the term, that he was no better than an accomplice and that his evidence should therefore be corroborated in material particulars, and that in the absence of such corroboration the accused should much as he had not been concerned in the perpetration of the murder itself. Even assuming that, after the murder had been committed, the witness had assisted in removing the body to the pit, and that he could have been charged with concealment of the body under s. 201 of the Penal Code, that was an offence perfectly independent of the murder, and the witness could not rightly be held to be either a guilty associate with the accused in the crime of murder, or liable to be indicted with him jointly. The witness was therefore not an accomplice and the rule of practice as to corroboration had no application to the case. Per Boddam, J.—Even if the witness was not an accomplice, having regard to the fact that he was cognizant of the crime for fifteen days without disclosing it and that he had a cause of quarrel with the accused at the time when he did disclose it, it would be most unsafe to act upon his evidence, unless it was corroborated in some material particulars connecting the accused with the crime. ## 1. EFFECT OF CHANGE OF LAW PENDING EXECUTION.

1. _____ Execution proceedings in suit commenced before Act VIII of 1859—Act VII of 1855. Proceedings in execution of a decree in a suit begun under the old procedure were regulated by Act VII of 1855. In re SONBHOOCHUNDER HALDER. Bourke O. C. 59

2. _____ Alteration in procedure—Retrospective effect of Act—Construction of statutes. Alterations in forms of procedure are retrospective in effect, and apply to pending proceedings. HAJRAT AKRAMISSA BEGAN v. VALIOLNISSA BEGAN. I. L. R. 18 Bom. 429

BALKRISHNA PANDHARINATH v. BABU YESAJI. I. L. R. 19 Bom. 204

3. _____ Effect of repeal of Act VIII of 1859. Imprisonment for Debt Act, 1859

Per WESTON, C.J.—The judgment-creditor had, under Act VIII of 1859, the right (subject to be divested only under the circumstances stated) to have such judgment-debtor as the above detained in custody for two years, unless he in the meantime fully satisfied the decree. Ch. XIX of Act X of 1877, sub-division I, is essentially prospective throughout. S. 342 must therefore be construed as relating only to future imprisonment, consequent on arrests to be made under Act X of 1877. There is not in Ch. XIX of that Act any trace of an intention on the part of the Legislature to deal with imprisonment commenced before the coming into force of the Act. Notwithstanding the repeal of Act VIII of 1859 by Act X of 1877, Act I of 1868, s. 6, saves the committal under Act VIII of 1859, while that Act was in force, of a judgment-debtor, and also his consequent detention, commenced before the coming into force of Act X of 1877, if such detention is to be regarded as "procedure." The effect of Act X of 1877 is to make such last-mentioned proceedings may be taken, were commenced and made before Act X of 1877, came into force. Therefore, assuming the rule as to the retrospective force of enactments relating to questions of mere procedure, whereby a retro-active and 3 of Act X of 1877, taken in connection with Act I of 1868, s. 6, show that, whilst saving all acts already done in execution of a decree in a suit instituted before Act X of 1877 came into force, all matters of procedure in execution subsequent to that date should be determined by the Act itself. The question raised by the present application is one of procedure, for the conditions and period under and for which the writ of imprisonment remains in force are as much matters relating to procedure as the issuing of the writ. Neither the wording of s. 342 or the heading to Ch. XIX of Act X of 1877 necessarily confine the "imprisonment" therein referred to to imprisonment commenced since that Act came into force. Though the judgdefeat an existing right, is only a rule of construction and must yield to the intention of the Legislature.

legislation, could have intended that two laws should continue for the next two years to operate concurrently, and that debtors imprisoned on the day before the latter Act came into force should be liable to be detained under the severer enactment. Per BAYLEY, J.—Cases on the construction of statutes relating to procedure reviewed. History creditor pointed out. Coombe v. Case, 13 B. L. R. 268, is inconsistent with the inviolable right claimed by the judgment-creditor to detain the judgment-debtor for two years. The sections of Act VIII of 1859, relating to imprisonment for debt and its duration, are concerned with procedure alone. The definitions of "decree" and "judgment-debtor" in Act X of 1877 are wide enough to include decrees passed, and judgment-debtors who have become such, before the coming into force of the Act. Ss.

they might, upon the ordinary principles of the interpretation of statutes, be clearly applicable. S 3 of Act X of 1877 implies that the procedure after decree shall be according to the provisions of that Act. In re Sumbhoochunder Haldar, 1 Bourke 69, and Williams v. Smith, 4 H. & N. 559, distinguished. S. 6 of Act I of 1868 does not apply in the present case. When of two possible constructions one is in strict harmony with the improvements introduced by the Act, and with the spirit of modern legislation, while the other treats the point under consideration as not having been considered by the Legislature at all, the former is to be preferred. Per GREEN, J.—Apert from s. 1 and the proviso to s. 3, there is not in Act X of 1877 any provision as to its operation with regard to pending or past proceedings. S. 1 does not alter or abridge the legal effect, after 1st October 1877, of proceedings had and completed before that date; and in construing s. 3 regard must be had to Act I of 1868, s. 6, though the general rule of construction contained in the last-mentioned section must yield to the intention of the Legislature expressed in any subsequent Act. The proviso to s. 3, coupled with s. 1 of Act X of 1877, shows that the intention of the Legislature was that the repeal of the old Procedure Act was to affect, to some extent, the procedure, other than that prior to decree, in suits instituted before Act X of 1877 came into force. Ample effect would be given to this intention, while visions of the new Code are to be operative. Cases giving a retro-active force to enactments relating only to procedure reviewed and distinguished. The right of an execution-creditor to detain his debtor till satisfaction of the decree for a period not exceeding two years, under a warrant issued before 1st October 1877 by virtue of Act VIII of 1859, is in nowise affected by the new Code coming into operation. Per WEST, J.—Cases on the retro-activity of enactments reviewed. Act VIII of 1859 must have clothed the Court's orders with an abiding validity, and the judgment creditors with an abiding right, or else with none at all. The ministerial officer is to act on the order of the Court according to its original purport. The order, in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, retains its validity until it is withdrawn or varied. The new procedure, therefore, does not apply, whether as touching person or property, except perhaps in matters of mere administration or provisional arrangement. It cannot, at any rate, apply so as to deprive the creditor of his right once acquired by the arrest of his judgment-debtor in execution. Any change in the relations of the parties can be made only in accordance with the later and existing law, but their previously subsisting relations continue to subsist as before. It is unlikely that the Legislature intended s. 312 of Act X of 1877 to apply to cases of imprisonment other than those arising under that Act. S. 312 is simply a negative provision, and the affirmative provisions, with which it is to be read, are to be found in the same chapter of the Act, and these can only be applied to cases arising after the Act has come into force. The close of the litigious transaction, like that of a contractual one, fixes the rights of the parties according to the then existing law, and in principle there is no distinction between a construction prejudicial to the debtor and a construction prejudicial to the creditor. The imprisonment under Act VIII of 1859, as a "proceeding commenced" comes within the scope of s. 6 of Act I of the other hand, it is integral with them, so as to form a proceeding commenced before the new Act came into force. In neither case can it bring within the new Act orders deriving their validity from another law. In the matter of the petition of RATANSI KALIANJI. I. L. R. 2 Bom. 148

(9)—Attachment—Political pension.* On the 28th of September 1877, i.e., three days before the new Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1877) came into operation, an application was made for the enforcement of a money-decree by attachment (inter alia) of a political pension enjoyed by the defendants. Under s. 216 of the former Code (Act VIII of 1859), a notice was issued on the same day to the defendants, calling upon them to show cause why the decree should not be executed. The defendants accordingly appeared on the day fixed, at which date the new Code had come into force, and contended that under s. 266, cl. (9), of the new Code, the pension was no longer attachable. Held, that all proceedings commenced and pending when Act X of 1877 became law were, under the General Clauses Act (Act I of 1868), s. 6, to be governed by the Code theretofore in force, the general rule of construction contained in that section not being affected or varied by ss. 1 and 3 of Act X of 1877, and that a bona fide application for enforcement of a decree in a particular way, coupled with an order of the Court in furtherance of that object, as much constitutes a proceeding in execution commenced and pending as the actual issue of a warrant of attachment. *VIDYAKAM v. On the 9th June 1888, a decree-holder applied for leave to execute his decree (which was one for costs) against a person who had become security for the costs of an appeal which had been dismissed with costs; this application was refused on the ground that the law, as it then stood, did not authorize such an application, the remedy of the decree-holder being by regular suit against the surety. Subsequently to the passing of Act VII of 1888, the decree-holder made a fresh application for such execution under s. 46 of that Act. The Court, after

Apurba Krishna Das*, 1. L. R. 21 Calc. 940, which are based upon the same principle, are also wrongly decided. Quere: Whether the decision in Lal Mohun Mukerjee v. Jogendra Chunder Roy, 1. L. R. 14 Calc. 636, was correct under s. 6 of the General Clauses Act by reason of the execution-proceedings having been commenced under Bengal Act VIII of 1869, an Act repealed by the Bengal Tenancy Act. That question did not arise in the present case, for though the execution-proceedings were instituted under the old law, the case is unaffected by s. 6 of the General Clauses Act, as the change in the law was brought about not by the repeal of the old Act, but by the addition to it of a new section (310A). Held, therefore, that s. 310A was applicable to the proceedings in execution in the present case, and in that view the Court below was bound, upon the application of the judgment-debtor, to set aside the sale, and, not having done so, it had failed to exercise jurisdiction within the meaning of s. 622 of the Code. The Court had power, therefore, to interfere under that section. JOGENDRANATH SINGH v. AMRITA LAL SINGH. 1. L. R. 22 Calc. 767

On 16th May 1895, the decree-holder assigned the decree to petitioner, who applied for execution on 6th December 1897. That application was struck off, and so was one which followed it. On 15th June 1898, petitioner again applied for execution, but counter-petitioner contended that the assignment was for his benefit and that, in consequence, petitioner was not entitled to execute the decree. The District Munsif held an enquiry under s. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code and dismissed the application, being of opinion that counter-petitioner's contention was true. Petitioner thereupon brought a suit to establish her claim that the assignment was for her own benefit. On 20th February 1901, the Appellate Court declared that petitioner had obtained a valid assignment of the decree and was entitled to execute it. On 24th November 1902, petitioner filed the present execution petition. On the question of limitation being raised:—Held, that the petitioner's

Where a decree has been affirmed on appeal, the only decree which can be amended under s. 206 of the Code is the decree to be executed, and the decree to be executed is that of the Appellate Court and not the superseded decree of the first Court, though the latter may, if necessary, be referred to for the purpose of executing the appellate decree. On 23rd July 1888, plaintiff obtained a decree for the redemption of certain lands on payment within three months of the amount due to the mortgagee, which was to be ascertained in execution proceedings. Against this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court. Pending the appeal, the plaintiff presented a darkhast for execution on the 4th October 1888. This darkhast was dismissed, as the plaintiff failed to produce a copy of the mortgage bond within the time allowed by the Court. The three months allowed by the decree for payment expired on the 23rd October 1888. On 11th February 1890, the High Court confirmed the decree, and on 11th April 1890 plaintiff presented a fresh darkhast for execution. Both the lower Courts dismissed this darkhast on the ground that the dismissal of the first darkhast operated as res judicata. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to execute the decree, and that his second darkhast was not barred either by limitation or on the principle of res judicata. *NANCHAND v. I. L. R. 20 Cal. 370

3. — Omission to give notice of execution—Civil Procedure Code, 1877, s. 248—Death of judgment-debtor after decree—Execution against legal representative. When a judgment-debtor has died after decree, but before application has been made to execute the decree, the Court before directing the attachment and sale of any property to proceed, must issue a notice to the party against whom the execution is applied for to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him, and its omission to do so will invalidate the entire subsequent proceedings. A judgment having been obtained by A against B, and B having died before application was made for execution, A applied for execution of his decree upon a tabular statement in which the judgment-debtor was stated to be C, widow of B, and C was also described as the person against whom execution was sought. Upon this application the property mentioned in the tabular statement was directed to be attached and sold, and it was accordingly sold in execution, and purchased by A. No notice under s. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code had been served upon C before issue of execution. Held, that the application was improper, that the order for attachment and sale should not have been made; and that the Court which made it should have set the execution aside as soon as it became aware that no notice had been issued in respect to its issue. The fact of there being in the Code of Civil Procedure no section expressly authorizing a Court to set aside its proceedings as irregular, as every Court has an inherent right to see that its process is not abused or does not irregularly issue, and may set aside all irregular proceedings as a matter of course, provided that the interests of third parties are not affected. See also: Under s.

Judge. The ruling in the case of Dalaji Ranchodas v. Mohunlal Dulsulram, I. L. R. 5 Bom. 680, that these sections apply to execution-proceedings in Small Cause Courts, is not affected by the explanation to s. 4 of Act VI of 1892. Execution proceedings under a decree against A in a Small Cause Court were transferred by a District Judge to a Subordinate Judge's Court where execution was proceeding against A under another decree, and it was objected that, as by the concluding paragraph of s. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code the attachments under the two decrees would be in different Courts, s. 295 of the Code would not apply, and rateable distribution could not be granted. Held, that the last paragraph of s. 25 did not convert the Subordinate Judge's Court into a Small Cause Court, but only provided for the trial of the suit, which had been transferred, being conducted by the Subordinate Judge's Court as a Small Cause suit. Quære Whether a Subordinate Judge, under cl. (d) of s. 223 of the Civil Procedure Code (XIV of 1882), can transfer a decree for execution to a Court of Small Causes when the property attached is situate within the local jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge.

of the Agent did not descend to his sons, and the decree was transferred to the Court of the first class Subordinate Judge at Ahmednagar for execution. Various objections were taken to the execution of the decree by that Court, but none on the ground that the Agent's decree could not be executed by a mere transfer to an ordinary Civil Court. The case went up twice to the High Court, under whose orders the execution was for several years continued in favour of A's representatives against the estate of B's sons. In 1881, one of A's representatives assigned his interest under the decree to C and D. Thereupon the transferees, C and D, applied to the first class Subordinate Judge at Ahmednagar to have their names substituted in the place of the transferor in the execution-proceedings. The Subordinate Judge rejected this application on the ground that execution had been going on for several years contrary to the ruling in Khusaldas v Sahaharam Ramchandra, 12 Bom. 212, which laid down that the Agent's decree could not be executed by a mere transfer to an ordinary Court, the remedy in such cases being by a suit on the decree. On this ground also he refused to recognize the transfer of the decree. Held, that, though the execution-proceedings in this case had been for many years irregularly conducted by a mere transfer of the Agent's decree to an ordinary Civil Court, still, as the Court which carried on the execution had jurisdiction to grant the same relief if a suit had been brought upon the decree, the irregularity, having been acquiesced in, did not vitiate the former proceedings in execution. *VISHNU SAKHARAM NAGARKAR v. In his first darkhast B prayed for attachment and sale of the property belonging to R; and the property was accordingly placed under attachment. Subsequently R made an application to the Court to allow him one month's time to raise money in order to satisfy K's decree and also the first decree of the defendant. The Court granted him one month's time and issued to him a certificate, as required by s. 305 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), which expressly directed that the amount realized by sale or mortgage of the property should be paid into Court and not to the judgment-debtor. The property in dispute was sold by R to the plaintiff privately; and the plaintiff made two applications to the Court, in which he stated that he had produced before the Nazir an amount of purchase money sufficient

130. — Decree in partition suit—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 263—Delivery of possession to decree-holder in execution—Dispossession of third party—Partition, suit for. The delivery of possession under s. 263 of the Civil Procedure Code contemplates the decree-holder being placed in actual possession by possibly dispossessing in the eye of law a third person who is not affected by the decree. The mere formal delivery of possession cannot of itself effect such dispossession unless the deprivation of possession be complete as a fact, a conclusion which the Court has to form on the whole of the evidence. It does not make any difference if such a decree is in a partition suit. RAMCHANDRA SUBRAO v. RATJI. I. L. R. 20 Bom 351

131. — Decree for possession of a village—Possession of account-books—Right of the holders of such a decree to the possession of village account-books and other papers relating to the management of the village—Title-deeds. The plaintiffs, as managers of a temple, obtained a decree for the possession of a certain Inam village. After taking possession of the village they called upon the defendants to hand over to them the village account books and other documents relating to the management of the village. The defendants refused. Thereupon the plaintiffs presented a dakhast in execution, praying (inter alia) for the delivery of those books and documents. The Subordinate Judge rejected this application on the ground that it was beyond the terms of the decree. Held, on appeal to the High Court, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the possession of the account books and documents in question as being essential to the proper and effectual enjoyment and management of the village awarded by the decree. Such books and documents were properly to be regarded as accessory to the estate and as claimable by those to whom it had been awarded. The title-deeds of an estate, counter part leases, and other documents of the like kind, such as kabulats in India, ought to be regarded as accessory to the estate, and to pass with it, whether the transfer is made by a conveyance, a decree or a certificate of sale. *BHAWANI DEVI v. In the meantime in proceedings taken to execute the decree of the first Court, plaintiff had obtained possession. On defendant applying for restitution of possession plaintiff contended that in putting plaintiff in possession the Court had gone beyond the terms of the decree and the defendant's remedy was by bringing a regular suit. Held, overruling the contention, that the Court, which was induced to wrongly give possession, had inherent power to order restitution. *Raja Singh v. which they admitted the debt, and each undertook to pay one-fourth thereof, with interest, by instalments; and each further agreed that, if the other three should make default and the amount due by them should not be realized by the sale of their property, then he should be liable to make good the deficiency. A decree was passed by the Court in accordance with the terms of the solehnamas. C and P each paid up their fourth shares, but M and B, having failed to pay, B applied for execution against C and P in respect of the liability of M and B. Held, that, in the absence of proof that the whole property of B had been sold, the decree was not entitled to interest after the time when he might and ought to have put up the property of the principal debtors for sale, when possibly it might have realized the whole of the debt then due. The execution of a decree for partition was stayed pending appeal on the defendant giving security that he would satisfy such decree as might ultimately be passed against him by the Appellate Court. That Court confirmed the decree of the lower Court. In obedience to the decree, the judgment-debtor deposited in Court certain property in his possession consisting of bonds, decrees, and other articles. But as he did not produce the whole of the property as ordered by the decree, the Court directed execution to proceed against his surety. The surety paid into Court the full sum stipulated in the surety-bond. Thereupon the judgment-debtor applied that the same

20. EXECUTOR, LIABILITY OF.

1. — [Failure to produce fund at appointed time—Advisory duty—Appointment of an agent—Degree of care in the appointment—Want of diligence—Breach of duty—Loss caused to the estate—Liability of executor—Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 32] When those entrusted with a fund for the benefit of another cannot produce it at the appointed time, prima facie they are liable for the loss which thereby accrues. One who undertakes a duty is bound to know what his duty requires. Where a testator by his will committed the management of the property to his widow along with two out of the five executors including the widow, it is not open to one of the executors, who was not specifically entrusted with the management, to contend for the purpose of avoiding liability as executor that his duties were purely advisory, that he was but one of many, that votes of the majority of the executors governed, and that the real management was entrusted to two of the executors in co-operation with the widow. In the appointment of an agent to carry on business it is incumbent on an executor to act with the same degree of care as a man of ordinary prudence would in his own affairs. But where there is want of diligence on the part of the executor both in the selection and supervision of the agent, and the loss sustained by the estate can reasonably be connected with the want of such diligence, the loss must fall on the executor. The indemnity clause of a 30 of the Trusts Act (II of 1882) casts the onus of proof on those who seek to charge a trustee with loss arising from the default of an agent, when the propriety of employing an agent has been established. But where there is a clear breach of duty in the employment and supervision of the agent, the liability of the trustee for breach of trust arises. LAKSHMINCHAND v. JAI KUMARBAI (1903) . . . I. L. The defendant's brother appointed as executrix and executors of his will his wife, K, together with the plaintiff and another, and the plaintiff being unwilling to undertake the duties of executor without remuneration, K offered him, and he accepted, a sum of Rs 125 a month for acting as executor; but before any formal agreement was entered into, the defendant's dewan on her behalf proposed to the plaintiff that he should accept a parwana for Rs 125 a month from the defendant instead of from K, to which the plaintiff agreed, and he accordingly received from the defendant a parwana, in which she agreed to pay him from her own pocket the above sum monthly as long as he continued to perform the duties of executor of the estate of her brother, in which she was interested. In pursuance of this agreement the plaintiff, in conjunction with the other executor, took out probate of the will, and the stipulated remuneration was paid for some time and then ceased. In a suit for his salary for the portion of the time during which he had acted as executor and had not received any remuneration, the plaintiff sought to recover the same from the receipt or retention by an executor or administrator of commission or agency charges from the assets of the estate.

and Administration Act (VI of 1889), s. 19, effect of, on a mortgage executed by executors between 1881 and 1889—Act VI of 1889, retrospective effect of—Construction of will. One A died in 1883, after having executed a will and leaving two minor and three major sons. The major sons, who were the executors, mortgaged a portion of the estate in favour of the plaintiff for the purpose of purchasing other properties, but they did not obtain the sanction of the District Judge required under s. 90 of Act V of 1881. The two material clauses of the will were as follows:—“(2) I have certain personal debt, and I have some debt also which is joint with my brothers. In order to pay off the said debt, the executors shall sell, mortgage, or pledge moveable or immovable properties of my estate or shall let out in patni or mouras-mokurati the immovable properties of my estate, and they shall pay off the said debt from the proceeds. (3) If the executors desire to sell the immovable properties which I own and hold in order to purchase more profitable properties than those, they shall be competent to do that even.” This suit was brought on that mortgage. Held, that, although under Act V of 1881, which was in force at the time the mortgage was executed, an executor had no power to sell immovable property without the sanction of the Court, s. 19 of the Probate and Administration Act (VI of 1889) had made valid all involuntary alienations that had been effected since 1881. That upon a construction of cls. 2 and 3 of the will, those clauses do not imply a limitation on the powers of the executors, and there is nothing in those clauses that interferes with the power of the executors under the law. RAJANI NATH MUKHOPADHYAYA v. Divecha, a Parsi inhabitant of Bombay, died in 1900. By his will he appointed his wife, his eldest son, and two other persons of whom the applicant was one, to be his executors, his wife and eldest son being named as managing executors. In 1901 the two latter applied for probate. The other two executors, though called on to join in the application, did not do so. The Court granted probate to the wife and the son, and reserved leave to the other executors to apply. No application was, however, made by them. In 1902 the applicant called upon the managing executors for an inventory and account of the deceased's estate. The applicant had no beneficial interest in the estate. It was contended for the managing executors that the applicant had no right to require an inventory and account from them. Held, that the applicant was entitled to an inventory and account. The facts that under s. 179 of the Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) the property of the deceased vested in the applicant as executor of the will, and that he might at any time apply for probate, gave him an interest sufficient to justify his application. JEHANGIR RUSTOMJI DIVECHA v. He then provided as follows. "In case of the death of my wife Parvatibai, the said affairs and distribution of money mentioned above to be paid by my second wife, Bai Mithubai." Parvatibai proved the will and died, and the plaintiff Mithubai thereupon applied for probate of the will. Held, that

But there are others of whom this can be predicated, as for instance legatees or next-of-kin who are not named in rule (b). Executors, administrators and heirs have this characteristic in common, not shared by legatees and next-of-kin, namely, that not only do they acquire title from the deceased, but they may represent him. In this is to be found the clue to the meaning of the rule. HATTAHOOD v. MAHOMED CASSIM (1906) . . . . . I. L. R. 31 Bom. 105

II, Art. 120 In law a very small interference or intermeddling with the estate of his testator on the part of a party appointed executor under a will is sufficient to charge him with liability as executor. An executor once having acted unquestionably as an executor cannot renounce that character and all the liabilities which attach to it and having once acted, the subsequent renunciation is void, and he continues liable to be sued in the character of an executor. Rogers v. Frank, (1827) 1 F. & J. 409, followed. Modern practice allows of an order charging wilful default being made at any time during the action on a proper case being shown. The plaintiff brought a suit against the executors of the will of her grandfather, praying for a declaration that she was absolutely entitled to the property of her grandfather and for an account of the property in the hands of the executors. The plaintiff claimed as heir and not under the will. Held, she was only entitled to accounts for six years preceding the suit as she took no interest in the property under the will, and the executors were not trustees for her and the property did not vest in them for any specific purpose in her favour. Such a suit is not a suit for the purpose of following such property in the hands of the executors and trustees. ABENUTAI v. EHRMAN (1908) . . . . . I. L. R. 32 Bom. 364

II, Art. 120—Delay—Aquiesscence.* An executor cannot, as a general rule, be allowed either immediately or by means of a trustee to be a purchaser from himself of any part of the assets. Such a purchase is treated as a breach of trust without enquiry whether the transaction was beneficial or not. The position, however, is somewhat different when the executor or administrator purchases from a legatee. Such a purchase may be a perfectly justifiable one, though if challenged in proper time a Court of equity will enquire into it, ascertain the value that was paid by the trustee and throw upon him the onus of proving that he gave full value and that all information was laid before the cestui que trust when the property was sold. Cook v. Collingridge, Jacob 607; 23 R. R. 155, 767; Thompson v. Eastwood, L. R. 2 A. C. 216, 236 followed. The purchase at an execution sale of a legatee's interest by the administratrix durante minoritate was in this case upheld as not made in contravention of s. 91 of the Probate and Administration Act. A sale is not to be avoided merely because when entered upon the purchaser had the power to become the trustee of the property purchased. It is immaterial whether the purchaser subsequently does in fact become the trustee or not. The true test to be applied in such cases is, has the purchaser used his position in such a way as to render it inequitable that the sale should be upheld. Clark v. Clark, 9 App. Cas. 733, applied. The right to perform certain religious ceremonies, conferred by the will exclusively on the executors, passed on the death of one of them to the remaining executors, and was not transmitted to the heir of the deceased executor. Upon the death or termination of authority by operation of law of an administration durante minoritate it is the duty of the executor, or other person who succeeds him in the administration, to recover and take possession of the estate.

institution of appropriate judicial proceedings. If he fails to do so, he must be held liable to the extent to which the estate would have been benefited if he had faithfully performed his duty. In order to see whether s. 10 of the Limitation Act applies to a suit against an executor, it must be determined, first, whether upon the terms of the will there was a trust under which the property had become vested in the executors for a specific purpose, and, secondly, with reference to the frame and scope of the suit, whether its purpose was to follow in the hands of the trustee or his legal representative property which had become vested in trust for a specific purpose. A suit for accounts pure and simple against an executor cannot be treated as a suit against a trustee for the purpose of following trust property. *Saroda v. Brojonath, I. L. is dangerous to convict on a charge which covers a wide period of time and which is supported by evidence indefinite as to the point of time when the offence was committed. Where a charge of conspiracy against the accused was framed in these words:—"That you . . . on or between the 8th of June 1903 and 31st July 1903, at Madnapur, unlawfully and maliciously conspired to cause by an explosive substance, viz., a bomb, an explosion in British India of a nature likely to endanger life and thereby committed an offence, etc. . . ." Semble: That the charge should have specified with what other persons the accused had conspired. As such partner he was entitled to his proportion of certain shares of the Hongkong Mill and of the commission earned by his firm as agents of such mill. were appropriated to the said L K and that he from the date of the entries ceased to have any interest in the firm of R L. Held, that under provisos 2 and 4 of s. 92 of the Evidence Act evidence was admissible to show that in fact the arrangement was that L K should continue to be entitled to his share in the commission. The suit was an executor of both wills. Held, (i) that R L was an express trustee in respect of L K's share of the commission, and that s. 10 of the Limit-of the receipt thereof was occasioned by their own default. (ii) That when the person liable for the payment of a legacy and the person entitled to receive it are the same, no question of limitation can arise. Binns v. Nichols, L. R. 2 Eq 257, followed. NARBONDAS v. NARBONDAS (1907)

Money lent in ordinary course of business to pay amount extorted—Lender—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 213, 342, and 384—Accomplice. The accused, as sub-inspector of police, arrested one J, wrongfully confined him, and extorted from him Rs 200 under a threat that he, the accused, would not release J unless the money were paid. This money was paid on this account by P, a money-lender, who lent J the money for this purpose. Accused was convicted under ss. 342 and 384 of the Penal Code. In appeal the Sessions Judge held that P was not an accomplice, and having considered his evidence accordingly, dismissed the appeal. Held, that it was sufficiently shown that the money was not voluntarily given, that it was given by J to obtain his release from police custody, in which he was detained on no reasonable or sufficient ground, and it was extorted, because the sub-inspector refused to release J, as he was bound to do, unless he were paid that money. That P, paying such money under such circumstances, could not be regarded as an accomplice of the sub-inspector in such misconduct. AKHOY KUMAR CHUCKERBUTTY v. JAGAT CHUNDER CHUCKERBUTTY I. L. A charge laid against certain persons before the police having been reported false by that body, the person who made the charge complained to the Magistrate of the district who directed a fresh investigation. The charge was again reported false. The complainant thereupon filed a petition, in which he alleged that the second investigation had not been properly conducted, and asked that further evidence might be taken by a specified officer. No further investigation having taken place, the complainant was ordered to be prosecuted under s. 211 of the Penal Code, and on trial was convicted and sentenced. On appeal to the High Court, it was held that the conviction was illegal, inasmuch as an opportunity had not been afforded to the accused of producing all his evidence in support of the charge made by him. In the matter of RUSSICK LALL MULLICK, 7 C. L. R. 382, and In the matter of BIRGOBI BHAGAT, 4 C. L. R. 134 followed. Per MACLEAN, J. The proper principle which should guide a Magistrate is that, if no complaint is made before him after a reasonable time has elapsed from the conclusion of a police enquiry, he would be justified in proceeding against a person who has made a complaint to the police which has been found to be false; but if a complaint is made, that complaint must be dealt with judicially. It is unfair even then to proceed against the complainant without hearing any witnesses whom he may wish to examine. Per MITTER, J. Although a Magistrate has power under s. 147 of the Criminal Procedure Code to dismiss a complaint without examining witnesses, yet in such a case no sanction for prosecution under s. 211 of the Penal Code should be granted. Land Acquisition Act does not make a Collector, nor is there any authority given to the Collector to administer an oath or to require a verification. It is a false statement made under a verification that constitutes an offence under s. 193 of the Penal Code.

Deputy Collector is not in a position to pass any final order in the matter of value of the land or the right to claim the price fixed, a party dissatisfied can claim a reference to the Civil Court, whose duty it is to settle the matter in dispute judicially; therefore, to subject parties who claimed the right to tion of a Court, is obviously premature and improper, and is almost certain to operate very prejudicially towards them in the trial before the Civil Court of the same matter. In proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act what may be found to be an exaggeration or over-estimate of the value of land cannot properly constitute a false statement, which would demand a prosecution for perjury, and

According to the Criminal Law in England from which the Indian system is largely drawn, the assignment of perjury must be proved by two witnesses or by one witness and the proof of other material and relevant facts confirming his testimony. This "is not a mere technical rule, but a rule founded on substantial justice." The Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872) does not provide that there must be corroboration to support a conviction, but in ordinary cases and where the provisions peculiar to Indian law do not apply, a rule which is founded on substantial justice may well serve as a safe guide to those, who have to administer the criminal law in India. Where with reference to an adoption the accused made a statement, and where no other expression would with equal propriety have been used to express the corporal act (of giving and taking in adoption), it is antagonistic to the first principles of criminal jurisdiction to explain away to the prejudice of the accused that statement, which in its legitimate sense indicated a corporal giving and taking. Per JENKINS, C.J.—A conviction for perjury cannot stand where the onus has been wrongly placed; explanations have been demanded from the accused, when no occasion for them existed; and the rule that there must be something in the case to make the oath of the prosecution witness preferable to the oath of the accused has not been satisfied. For silence to carry incriminating force in a case like the present there must have been circumstances which not only afforded the accused an opportunity to speak, but naturally and properly called for the declaration, which is said to be absent. *EMPEROR v. take one view at one time and a contrary view at another, there can be no perjury, unless on oath he has stated facts on which his first statement was based and then denied those facts on oath on a subsequent occasion. Where the sole and whole question is—are the statements forming the subject of the charge so contrary that one or the other of them must be necessarily false?—the answer to that question depends upon the construction to be put upon the two depositions from which the statements are taken and their construction, as indeed the construction of any document, is a question of law, not of fact. It is not correct to say that the law as laid down in the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) gives the High Court no power to go into evidence in revision. The Bombay High Court has, as a matter of practice, held that it will not go into evidence as a rule, but will interfere only under special circumstances, or where there is an error of law. The accused in a criminal case is merely on the defensive and, unless there is any positive admission of a fact by him, any omission, on his part, to explain what indeed can be explained without his explanation should not be pressed against him. Per ASTOR, J. (contra)—The rule of practice is that the High Court ordinarily refrains from opening questions of fact, when no appeal lies, except on some ground of law and in order to remedy a clear miscarriage of justice. Where the question before the High Court exercising its powers of revision under s. 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898) is one of appreciation of evidence, the rule of practice adopted is to refuse to disturb a conviction when there is legal evidence, oral or documentary, to sustain it. "Under the law of British India, it is not necessary that the charge should allege which of two contradictory statements upon oath is false, but it is sufficient (unless indeed some satisfactory explanation of the contradiction should be established) to warrant a conviction of the offence of giving false evidence to show that an accused person has made one statement upon oath at one time and a directly contradictory statement at another." It is not the duty of the Court of first instance (and far less of a Court on appeal or revision) to supply ab extra an explanation, which the accused himself has not suggested or an intention or knowledge which the accused has not claimed. *EMPEROR v. 12 B. L. R. P. C. 210; 20 W. R. 44

2. ——— Immoveable property—General Clauses Consolidation Act (I of 1863), s. 3—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 106 A jalkar, or right of fishery, as being a benefit arising out of land covered by water, comes within the definition of "immoveable property" set out in the General Clauses Act (I of 1863), and is therefore immoveable property under s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) RAM GOPAL BISACK v. NURUMDIN alias NOOR MAHANED MUNDUL . . . I. L. R. 20 Cal. 446

4. ——— Right to soil and water in one person—Interest in the soil. Though the right of jalkar does not imply any interest in the soil, yet where it is found as a fact that both water and land are the property of the zamindar as such, the two rights are not to be separated CHUNDER COOMAR ROY v. BURUDA KANT ROY
W. R. 1864, 63

5. ——— Right to tank—Fishing in tank. The exercise of the right of fishing in a tank is no proof of ownership in the tank. ENTOZAH HOSSEIN v. THREE PERSHAD SINGH 5 W. R. 261

FISHERY—contd.

6. ——— Right in the soil—"Interest in land"—Road Cess Act (Beng Act X of 1871). A jalkar does not impart any interest in the soil itself, and therefore a patni of a jalkar is not an "interest in land" within the meaning of the definition in the District Road Cess Act. DAVID v. GIRISH CHUNDER GUHA

7. ——— Settlement of jalkar. There is no such broad proposition of law as that the settlement of a jalkar implies no right in the soil. RAKHIAL CHURN MUNDUL v. WATSON & Co. . . . I. L. R. 10 Cal. 50

8. ——— Jalkar drying up—Right of holder of jalkar. When a jalkar dries up, the dried land does not, as a matter of course, become the right of the holder of the jalkar. BISSEK LALL DOSS v. KHYRUNISSA BEGUM . . . 1 W. R. 79

9. ——— Drying up of phl. By pottah certain land was leased, and a right of jalkar or fishery in a bhl or lake was granted on payment of certain jamma. The bhl became permanently dried up. Held, that the grant being merely of the fishery, the lessee acquired no interest in the soil, and the lessor was entitled to re-enter on the land formerly covered with the water of the bhl SUROOF CHUNDER MOZOOMDAR v. JARDINE, SKINNER & Co. . . . Marsh. 334; 2 Hay 465

22. ———— Dispute as to fishery rights—Possession—Title. In a dispute about jalkars between the proprietors of a neighbouring estate, where the title-deeds of the two parties do not specially mention the particular pieces of land or water in contest, the title of the parties must depend on the fact as to which of them has been in possession. SHAMA SOONDUREE DEBIA v. COLLECTOR OF MULDAY . . . . . 12 W. R. 184

23. ———— Right of fishery in navigable river, proof of—Private against public right. When the exclusive jalkar right in a navigable river is set up against the ordinary rights of the State and the community, it must be established by clear and strong proof. BAGRAM v. COLLECTOR OF BRULLOOK . . . . . W. R. 1864, 243

24. ———— Right of fishery in navigable river. The right of fishing in a navigable river does not belong to the public, nor is the Government prohibited by any law from granting to individuals the exclusive right of fishing in such a river. CHUNDER JALEIN v. The right of the public to fish in the sea, whether it and its subjacent soil be or be not vested in the Crown, is common, and is not the subject of property. That right may, in certain portions of the sea, be regulated by local custom. Members of the public, exercising the common right to fish in the sea, are bound to exercise that right in a fair and reasonable manner, and not so as to impede others

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Assignment of lease—Privity of contract—Liability to repair—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 3. The word fixture is one of common use in English law, but in India the word is not so familiar, and the maxim, 'quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit,' on which the law of England as to fixtures seems to have been originally founded, has never received so wide an application here as there. For anything to be a fixture it must be "attached to the earth" as that expression is defined in s. 3 of the Transfer of Property Act. Where the occupiers of premises continue in possession in the belief common to them and the owner of such premises that they hold under the terms of a lease, which had never been assigned to them by the original lessee and which had expired, they are bound to carry out such covenants as to repairs, etc., as would have to be performed

The rule in the case of foreign judgments sought to be executed in our Courts is, that such judgments must finally determine the points in dispute, and must be adjudications upon the actual merits, and that they are not open to impeachment on the ground of want of jurisdiction, whether over the cause, the subject-matter, or the parties, or that the defendant was not summoned, or had no opportunity of defence, or that the judgment was fraudulently obtained. *SREENIVAS BHEEM v. 7. ————— Decree "in absentem"—Submission to jurisdiction—Suit on judgment of foreign Court. The plaintiff brought a suit in the French Court at Karikal against the defendant, a British subject, resident in British India. The defendant employed a vakil to defend the suit, but, on the case coming on for hearing, the vakil stated he had no instructions, and an ex parte decree was passed. An application by the defendant to have the decree set aside was held to be time-barred. The plaintiff now brought a suit on the judgment of the French Court to recover the amount decreed to him. Held, that the suit was not maintainable for the reason that the decree had been passed against the defendant in absentem by a foreign Court, to which he had not submitted himself. Semle. No suit is maintainable in any Court in British India founded upon the judgment of a Court situate in a Native State. The Courts of British India cannot enforce the decrees of any Native Courts, except as provided by s. 431 of the Civil Procedure Code, Act X of 1877. Under that section, the decrees of certain Native Courts may be executed in British India, as if they had been made by the Courts of British India. A suit will not lie in the Courts of India upon the judgment of any Court in British India. The only exception to this rule is in

Where a defendant sued in a foreign tribunal takes no exception to the jurisdiction, he cannot question the jurisdiction afterwards, inasmuch as he has led the plaintiff to believe that the proceedings are allowed by him to be effectual, and encouraged the plaintiff to proceed in them instead of withdrawing from them and instituting proceedings elsewhere. Irregularity of procedure on the part of a foreign tribunal, which ordinarily proceeds in accordance with recognized principles of judicial investigation, is not a sufficient ground for refusing to give effect to its judgment. Where limitation bars the remedy, but does not destroy the right, the judgment of a foreign tribunal is not open to the objection that the suit (on a contract) was barred by the Law of Limitation applicable in the country where the contract was made. *NALLATAMBI MEDALIAH v. As a general rule, a Court can exercise jurisdiction over a foreigner, only if he is resident within the limits of its territorial jurisdiction. Natives of British India, though foreigners, owe allegiance to the common sovereign of England and British India, and are subject to the supreme legislative authority in the British Empire. Therefore, the supreme legislature in the British Empire authorises an English Court in any class of cases to exercise jurisdiction over a non-resident foreigner by reason of the cause of action arising within its jurisdiction, and that foreigner is a native of British India, he cannot treat the judgment passed as a nullity merely because he did not reside within the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it. Order XI, rule 1 (e), under the English Judicature Act constitutes a legislative Act of the Sovereign power, regulating the jurisdiction in the case of a British subject resident in British India and outside the ordinary territorial jurisdiction of the English Courts, and gives the English Courts jurisdiction over such British subjects in a case which falls within the order. British Government. Before the lapse, the issues now in suit belonged to the Chief, and were in the hands of managers on his behalf. The last manager, the ancestor of the present parties, remained, after 1840, in possession of the estate till his death in 1880, having been continued therein for life in 1852. In 1867 the Government directed the continuance of the entire estate to "the loyal members of his family." Held, that no proprietary interest in the estate had been shown to have belonged to the ancestors when Jalau was a principality; that all that could be claimed by the defendants was derived from the Government which, after the lapse of the State, had the right at their discretion to control the descent of the estate, and had exercised this discretion. There had been no formal sanad; but on the true construction of the official correspondence, as to which the Courts below had differed, the Government first continued the possession of the ancestor for life, and afterwards conferred the inheritance, as to one moiety of the estate, upon the defendant, who was one of the sons of the original holder, and, as to the other moiety of the estate, upon the plaintiffs, who were the four

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894)—Distinction between the two Acts. The most important distinction between the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894) and the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878) lies in this—that whereas in the Land Acquisition Act the Legislature has expressly constituted the Local Government the ss. 3, 4, 10—"To constitute a reserved Forest"—Local Government, powers of, regarding waste land—Ultra vires order—Nullity—Civil Courts—Jurisdiction. S 3 of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878) does not make the exercise of the power conferred dependent on the opinion or decision of the Local Government, but upon a question of fact. It runs "the Local Government may constitute any forest land or waste land, which is the property of Government, etc." If the land actually fulfils that condition, Government can exercise the powers, not otherwise. The test is, not what appears to the Local Government, but questions of law and fact wherever their jurisdiction is not expressly barred by the Legislature. The power in s 4 of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878) to appoint an officer to inquire and determine as to rights is limited to land, which it is proposed to constitute reserved forest and "to constitute a reserved forest" is a phrase defined in s 3. And under that definition, the constitution of a reserved forest connotes as the object forest or waste land only. The specified character of the land is an essential part of the Act defined. According to the definition the phrase "to constitute a reserved forest" means to convert land by notification from forest or waste. The land, therefore, to which a proposal under s. 4 relates, must be forest or waste land, and it is only in respect of such land that the officer appointed has power to inquire and determine. When the land is forest or waste, the Forest officer has the power to inquire into and determine as to rights of way or pasture, forest produce or water courses, and he may admit or reject such claims with finality, because he is dealing with land in respect of which he has a duly delegated jurisdiction. It is possible there may be other rights in or over land which may render it desirable for Government to acquire full ownership and for such cases s. 10 of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878) provides, without, however, extending the application of the section to any land incapable of constitution as reserved forest. The provisions of the Indian Forest Act (VII of 1878) do not bar the jurisdiction of the Court to decide whether the land in suit is or is not forest or waste land and whether, if it be not such land, the plaintiffs are entitled to the occupation thereof. *BALVANT RAMCHANDRA v. object of Ch. IX of the Indian Forest Act, 1878, is to regulate the rights of owners, and not to deprive them of their property in drift and stranded timber and wood. S. 45 of that Act does not divest the owner of, or transfer to the Government, any right therein. Nor does anything in the Act affect the right of the Government to take possession and dispose of timber and wood whereof they are the undisputed owners. But upon certain conditions only, the Government have a right to the possession of any drift and stranded timber and wood collected by their officers, which, however, may be claimed by the true owner, who may be a person holding a jalkar or water right comprehending those things. The conditions are that the officers of Government shall store the timber in the manner, and issue the notifications, required by the Act. In case of such procedure not being followed, and the wood being treated as the property of the Government, the latter are in the event of the wood being found not to belong to them, in no better position than any other trespasser. The title to collect given to the Government by the Act is coupled with, and dependent upon, the duty of giving notice to the public, in order that the true owner, whether he be a person from whom the wood has drifted away or the owner of a jalkar, or however he may be entitled, may claim the drifted timber in the manner, and within the time, prescribed by the Act. seems also manifest that the contention is untenable that the benefit of the first proclamation did not extend to the case of trees planted after its cancellation in 1851. Even though the khot may not be the proprietor of the soil in khoti khasgi lands, he is certainly the holder of an interest in it, and that interest, having in 1823 been increased by the concession of all trees which he might grow thereafter, could not subsequently be reduced by the withdrawal of the right to such trees. In re ANTAJI KESHAV TAMBE I. Claim for hills—Village and land made over to claimant's ancestor by Government—Hills situated within immemorial boundaries of village—Right of inamdar irrespective of evidence of actual enjoyment—Necessity for proving adverse possession against Government. A jagirdar preferred a claim to certain hills. It appeared that in 1842 the uncontrolled management of a certain village and pieces of land was made over to the ancestor of the present claimant. Prior to such handing over, Government officers had been in possession on behalf of the Inamdar. It was not alleged that, when such possession was handed over, the hills in question were excepted; and it was not disputed that the hills were within the immemorial boundaries of the village. Held, that upon these facts, apart from any evidence of actual enjoyments by the Inamdar, he should be held entitled to the hills. Held, also, that it was not necessary for the claimant, in these circumstances, to prove adverse possession as against Government. *AJAJUDDIN ALI KHAN v. Implies the loss of a legal right by reason of some breach of obligation. When arrears of assessment are levied by sale, then s. 50 of the Land Revenue Code (Bombay Act V of 1873) in pursuance of an obvious policy, empowers the Collector to sell "freed from all tenures, incumbrances and rights created by the occupant..... or any of his predecessors-in-title or in anywise subsisting against such occupants." Should the Collector otherwise dispose of the occupancy, the action affords no such protection, and the legal relations must be determined by reference to the ordinary law. So judged, the effects of a forfeiture and the subsequent acquisition of the forfeited property are subject to the control of equities arising out of the conduct of the parties. *Balkrishna Vasudev v. Prior to the forfeiture by Government of the Parlakimfdi zamindari in 1800, the Malikhs (certain hill tracts to the north of the zamindar) formed part of the zamindari. The inhabitants of these hill tracts, the Savaras, were once a turbulent people and in order to control them and to defend the passes to the plains, the country was divided into Muttas or forts and each placed under the control of a local chief or Bisoyee. The Bisoyees held the Muttas on a mere service tenure paying an annual sum to the zamindar by way of kattubadi or quit-rent—an arrangement not unlike that which prevails in other hill tracts in India. It is not necessary that the document should be published or made in the name of a really existing person. The accused, in order to obtain a recognition from a settlement officer that they were entitled to the title of "Laskur," filed a sanad before that officer purporting to grant that title. This document was found not to be genuine. The Sessions Judge convicted the accused under ss. 471, 454 of the Penal Code. Held, on appeal, that, even supposing the accused had used the document knowing it not to be genuine, they could not be found guilty, as the intention of the accused was not to cause wrongful gain or wrongful loss to any one; their intention being to produce a false belief in the mind of the settlement officer that they were entitled to the dignity of "Laskur," and that this could not be said to constitute "an intention to defraud." I. WHAT CONSTITUTES FRAUD, AND PROOF OF FRAUD.

1. Imputations of fraud—Disposal of allegations of fraud . Imputations of fraud should be disposed of at the hearing, and should not be left open to be disposed of by the master on the taking of accounts . LALLUBHAI VALLABHAI v.
KAVASJI NANASHAI . 6 Bom. O. C. 209

2. Proof of fraud—Presumption.
Fraud and dishonesty are not to be presumed on conjecture, however probable . IMDAD ALI v.
KOOTHY BEGUM

6 W. R. P. C. 24: 3 Moo. L. A. 1

3. It is often the case that fraud cannot be established by positive proofs, and on the other hand it is not to be presumed from circumstances of mere suspicion. It is generally shown by such circumstantial evidence as overcomes the natural presumption of honesty and fair dealing, and satisfies a reasonable mind that such presumption has been displaced. MATHURA PAN DAY v. RAM RUCHA TEWARI.

3 B. L. R. A. C. 108; 11 W. R. 462

4. — Suit to set aside bonds. Mere speculation and probability will not in law support a finding of fraud. Where a party puts forward a charge of collusion with a view to defraud, it is incumbent on him to support it by evidence to a certain reasonable extent, e.g., where a party admits that an instrument which on the face of it appears to deal with the property in question was not intended to be operative according to its purport. RAJ NARAIN v. ROWSHUN MULL.

22 W. R. 124

KUBEEROODIN v. JOGUL SHARA 25 W. R. 133

5. — Allegation of fraud in pleadings—Plaint, form and contents of. Where fraud is charged against the defendant, the plaintiff must set forth particulars of the fraud which he alleges. CHANVIRAPA v. DANAVA.

I. L. R. 19 Bom. 593

6. — Proof of allegation of fraud. A plaintiff who charges another with fraud must himself prove the fraud, and he is not relieved from this obligation because the defendant has himself told an untrue story. MAHOMED GOLAB v. MAHOMED SULLIMAN.

I. L. R. 21 Calc. 612

7. — Allegation of fraud and collusion. Where a party alleges the fraud or collusion of the opposite party as a ground of relief, general allegations of it will not be sufficient, but the instances upon which such allegations are founded must be stated, as it is unreasonable to require the opposite party to meet a general charge of that nature without giving him a hint of the facts from which it is to be inferred. JOOSNA PERSHAN SOOKOOL v. JOYKAM LALL MAHTO.

2 C. L. R. 26

8. — Charge of fraud—Alteration in nature of fraud charged. It is a well-known rule that a charge of fraud must be substantially proved as laid, and that when one kind of fraud is charged, another kind cannot, on failure of proof, be substituted for it. In a suit by the Official Assignee to recover a sum which it was alleged had been improperly and fraudulently paid away from the estate of an insolvent, the plaintiff as presented alleged the fraudulent concealment of the payment from the Assignee. Afterwards when all the payment being a fraud upon the Court. Held, that the amendment at the stage when it was made was not permissible. The High Court having decreed the claim on a finding of fraud different from either of the above:—Held, that on this ground alone the judgment might have been reversed. Montesquieu v. Sondys, 18 Ves. Jun. 302, followed. ABDUL HOSSAIN ZENIAL v. TURNER

9. — General allegations of fraud—Plaint, amendment of—Evidence of fraud—Objection taken for first time in special appeal. Where a plaintiff seeks relief on the ground of fraud, and the plaint contains general allegations, but no specific instances of the alleged fraud, it ought to be amended to state—

The Court of first instance, without going into evidence, rejected the plaintiff's claim on the preliminary ground that the plaintiff had no right to sue during the lifetime of his adoptive mother. In second appeal, the respondent objected that the plaint was defective. The plaintiff's pleader asked for leave to amend it by specifying certain instances of the alleged fraud. Held, that the amendment could not then be allowed, and the suit must fail. When fraud is charged, the evidence must be confined to the allegations. KRISHNAJI v. WAMANJI.

15. ———— Sale for arrears of rent—Benami purchase—Act VIII of 1835. Plaintiff sued for possession on a declaration of his lifetime right to a portion of a talukh, for which his mother obtained an istamee pottah. Afterwards the original superior tenure having been sold for arrears of rent under Act VIII of 1835, the father of defendant No. 1 purchased those rights and interests in the name of the defendant, and then obtained from the zamindar a pottah and settlement of the talukh as one coming under the provisions of Regulation VIII of 1819. He then fell into arrears, the talukh was sold under the Regulation last cited, and he purchased it benami. Held, that the legal inference from these facts was that the conduct of the father of the defendant No. 1 was fraudulent.

RADHA MONDH MUNDUL v. JADOOMONZER DASSEE . . . 23 W. R. 369

19. ———— Vendor and purchaser—Omission of purchaser to take possession—Sale by him to another—Effect of want of possession. A sold certain land to B by a sale-deed dated 15th July 1871. The deed was optionally registrable and was not registered. A continued in possession after the date of the sale. A sold the same land to the plaintiff by a deed of sale dated 1st February 1872. The deed was registered, its registration being compulsory. It was unaccompanied with possession. In 1882 B obtained possession of the land from the sons of A and sold it to the defendant by a sale-deed dated 14th October 1882. This deed was registered and accompanied with possession. In 1893 the plaintiff sued for possession of the land in dispute. Held, that the defendant's vendors, by merely omitting to take possession of the land on his purchase, was not guilty of any positive fraud or of any concealment or negligence so gross as to amount to fraud that would entitle the plaintiff to relief against him.

4. ——— Fraudulent and collusive decree—Judgments in rem—Judgments inter partes—Evidence Act, 1872, s. 41. Where a decree in a suit has been obtained by means of the fraud of one party against the other, it is binding on parties and privies and on persons represented by the parties so long as it remains in force, but it may be impeached for fraud and may be set aside if the fraud is proved. In the case of judgments in rem the same rule holds good with regard to persons who are strangers to the suit. Where a decree has been obtained by the fraud and collusion of both the parties to the suit, it is binding upon the parties. It is also binding upon the privies of the parties, except probably where the collusive fraud has been on a provision of the law enacted for the benefit of such privies. But persons represented by, but not claiming through, the parties to the suit may, in any subsequent proceeding, whether as plaintiff or defendant, treat the previous judgment so obtained by fraud and collusion as a mere nullity, provided the fraud and collusion be clearly established. The purchaser at a sale by public auction did, by the exercise of fraud and collusion with the agent of the execution creditor (though without the creditor's personal knowledge), succeed in becoming the purchaser at a depreciated value. There was no material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale. Held, that the Court which ordered the sale had jurisdiction to refuse to confirm the sale on the ground of the fraud practised by the agent of the execution creditor and the purchaser. Held by KERAN, J., that the party defrauded ought not to be

In 1874 the plaintiff P bought a house from G, but caused the conveyance to be executed by O, in the defendant G's name. This was done with the object of protecting the property against the claims of the plaintiff's creditors. The plaintiff occupied the house, ostensibly as tenant to the defendant for a nominal rent. In 1880 the defendant brought a suit against the plaintiff to recover possession of the house, and obtained defendant had obtained against him by his own contrivance. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant held in trust for him, the object of that trust and would be enforced, when the original relations of the parties had become merged in the decree obtained by the defendant against the plaintiff. The general principle is that where a defendant has suffered a judgment to pass against him, the matter is then placed beyond his control. Held, also, upon the general principle of res judicata, that the plaintiff was estopped from raising the question of fraud in the present suit, which he might and ought to have urged in the former litigation. Held, further, that the suit, if regarded as one for setting aside a decree obtained by fraud, was barred by limitation, such fraud as there was being as well known to the plaintiff in 1880 as in 1883, when the present suit was filed. A party to a collusive decree is bound by it except possibly when some other interest is concerned that can be made good only through him. Achmedbhoy Habibhoy v. Vullerbhoy Cassumbhoy, 1. L. R. 6 Bom. 703, and Venkataramana v. Piramma, 1. L. R. 10 Mad 17, followed. Paran Singh v. Lalji Mal, 1. L. R. 1 All. 403, dissented from. A decree fraudulently obtained may be challenged by a third party who stands to suffer by it either in the same or in any other Court; but, as between the parties themselves to a collusive decree, neither of them can escape its consequences. Where an illegal purpose has been effected by a transfer of property, the transferee is not to be treated as a trustee holding it for the benefit of the transferor. Where a collusive transaction has merely proceeded to the length of sham deeds passed between the parties, or even of false declarations made by them in litigation for their common benefit, the Courts may displace the apparent by the real ownership. In cases in which the transaction was still inchoate, or the grantor still retained a locus penitentis, the formal act has been relieved against by reference to the real intention of the parties. The violation or infringement of the law had not in such cases been completed and a suspensive condition was annexed to the initial acts of which Courts of Equity could take advantage; but, apart from this, a man cannot confine the operation of his deed within the limits of an intended fraud. The purpose having been once answered, especially, by defeat of a third person's rights asserted in Court, a claim for reconvoyance would be properly dismissed. CHESVIRAPPA BEN VEDHADRAPPA v. Dhundai, I. L. R. 16 Bom. 1; Isvar Timappa Hegde v. Devar Venkappa, I. L. R. 27 Bom. 146; Chatterput Singh v. Maharnj Bahadur, I. L. R. 32 Calc. 198, and Reese River Silver Mining Co v. Atwell, L. R. 7 Eq. 347, referred to. But a suit cannot be dismissed on this ground, if the objection is taken for the first time in appeal. In order to establish the validity of a conveyance impeached as a fraud upon creditors, consideration and good faith must both be proved. If the transfer is for valuable consideration and is made with a full intention that the property should be parted with, and not as a cloak for retaining a benefit to the grantor, it will be valid as against a creditor, though the object of the aids and assists in executing it, the transfer cannot be regarded as one made in good faith. In the absence of a law of bankruptcy, a preferential transfer of property to one creditor in satisfaction of an existing debt due to him is not fraudulent as to other creditors, although the debtor in making the transfer intended to defeat the claims, and the transferee had knowledge of such intention, if the only purpose of the latter is to secure his own

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE—*concl'd.

2. Conveyance to defraud creditors cannot be impeached, if creditors have been defrauded or if conveyance held valid by decree though collusively obtained. A party, who conveys property to another for no consideration to shield such property from the claims of creditors, cannot set up the fraudulent nature of the transaction when creditors have been defrauded thereby. Even where no creditors have been defrauded, if, in a suit to which the vendor and vendee are parties, the bond fides of the transaction is alleged and upheld, the vendor cannot, in a subsequent suit, get rid of the effect of the decree collusively obtained as between himself and the vendee, when such decree had been obtained in a proceeding intended to carry out the fraud. Where the former collusive decree had proceeded on the footing that the consideration had been paid, the purchaser, in the subsequent suit, is entitled to obtain possession without payment of the purchase money, even though it is shown that it was not paid, as the effect of compelling the purchaser to pay will be to enable the vendor to get rid of the effect of the former collusive decree, which neither party can be permitted to do. Rangammal v. Venkatachari, 1 L. R. 18 Mad. 373, referred to. Yaramati Krishnayya v. Chunduru Papayya, 1 L. R. 20 Mad. 326, referred to. Per ABUD RAHIM, J.—It is a clear and well established principle of law that, when the decree of a Court has been passed upholding a certain transaction between the parties to a suit, neither the plaintiff nor the defendant will be allowed afterwards to say that the transaction was in fact fraudulent or conveyance

And so also, when two persons have combined to defraud a third person and succeeded in their effort without obtaining the decree of a Court, the Court will not permit one of the parties to such fraud to show that the transaction between him and the other party to the fraud was not really what it purported to be and that it does not therefore bind him. In the first case the decree is regarded as a subsisting and effectual decree so that the question covered by it is treated as res judicata.

of many different meanings, must necessarily, in each instance in which it is used by the Legislature, be construed with reference to the intention to be inferred from the context. Thus in s. 12 of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (Bom. Act IV of 1887) or in s. 3 of 30 and 37 Vict., c. 38, in connection with such words as roads, streets, and thoroughfares, it has a very different meaning from that which it bears in s. 4 of the Act, and from that given to it in connection with s. 3 of 16 and 17 Vict., c. 119, by judicial decisions. The mischief aimed at in s. 4 of the Act is a mischief clearly distinct from that aimed at in s. 12 of the Act. In the former, the mischief aimed at is the practice of individuals making a profit by providing a spot of their own selection known as a place where gambling is to be carried on, and making a livelihood by attracting people to a place which they would not otherwise frequent. In the latter, the offence is not that the individual members are making a profit at all, but simply that they are carrying on their gambling with such publicity that the ordinary passer-by cannot well avoid seeing it and being enticed—if his inclinations be that way—to join in or follow the had example openly placed in his way. the Magistrate erred in applying to the accused the presumption arising under s. 7 of the Act. The presumption under s. 7 of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (Bombay Act IV of 1887) arises only where there has been an arrest and a search under s. 6 of the Act. As a First Class Magistrate has, under s. 6 of the Act, power to give authority under a special warrant to a police officer of the class designated in the section to make the arrest and the search, the Legislature must be presumed to have intended that the Magistrate, First Class, should have the authority to make the arrest and the search himself, if necessary. Where the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act has provided for the manner or place of investigating or inquiring into any offence under it, its provisions must prevail and the Criminal Procedure Code must give way. Accordingly, no provision of the Code as to the authority empowered to issue a warrant for arrest or search, or the person to whom and the conditions under which such warrant may be issued, can apply for the purposes of s. 7 of the Act. The authority, the persons and the conditions must be respectively those specifically mentioned in s. 6 of the Act and no other. But the special provision in s. 6 would still be subject to the general provisions of ss. 65 and 105 of the Code. When a Magistrate, First Class, or other officer mentioned in s. 6 of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (Bombay Act IV of 1887) himself acts under its provisions, instead of acting through an officer of the particular class prescribed therein under a special warrant, he must act strictly in compliance with those provisions. The first condition necessary to make an arrest and seizure, under the section, legal so as to bring in the operation of s. 7 is that where the Magistrate is acting on information that there is a common gambling-house the section instead of issuing a special warrant,

S. 6 of the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act (Bombay Act IV of 1887) must be construed strictly because s. 7 gives to an arrest and seizure under it an operation different from that of the general presumption of innocence in criminal cases. *Imperial v. 3. Pending proceedings—Effect of repeal. An appeal having been filed on the 10th April 1879, a memorandum of objections under s. 561 of the Civil Procedure Code was filed by the respondent on the 18th September 1879 before the actual hearing which took place in July 1880. Held, that the memorandum under s. 561 of the Code as amended by s. 80 of Act XII of 1879 ought to have been filed not less than seven days before the date fixed for hearing, and was therefore inadmissible. On an application for review:—Held per MACLEAY, J., distinguishing the case of Ratanji Kullianji, 1 L. R. 2 Bom. 148, that nothing having been done and no proceeding having been commenced by the respondent up to 31st May 1879, under the Procedure Code as it existed prior to that date, the filing of the memorandum was governed by the present Code as amended, and it was therefore admissible. Held per MITTEN, J., that the appeal, having been filed before Act XII of 1879 was passed, was a proceeding within the meaning of s. 6 of the General Clauses Act, I of 1868, and that the new Act therefore did not affect the appeal. *RAM GOBIND JEOONER v. 4. Criminal Procedure Code, 1882, s. 558—Change of procedure—Effect on pending trial. S was tried by a Sessions Court in December 1882 on charges some of which were triable by assessors, others by jury. Before the trial was concluded, the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, came into force. By s. 269 of that Act, all such charges are to be tried by jury. By s. 558 of the same Act, the provisions of that Act are to be applied, as far as may be, to all cases pending in any Criminal Court on 1st January 1883. Held, that, by virtue of s. 6 of the General Clauses Act, 1868, the trial must be conducted under the rules of procedure in force at the commencement of the trial. *SRINIVASACHARI v. not of such a nature as would make the gift effectual to it to be contrary to public policy), should not operate to give the donee or vendee a right to obtain possession. KALIDAS MULLICK v. KANHAYA LAL PUNDIT I. L. R. 11 Cal. 121 L. R. 11 I. A. 218 alleging that defendant had failed to perform the services. Defendant denied failure to perform, and pleaded that the contract was not revocable. Held, in special appeal reversing the decisions of the lower services on the one side was the presupposition of the continuous existence of the gift on the other, or whether there was a mere gift with the charge upon it, the primary intent being to give; that this was a question of construction; and that in the present case, taking the agreement and counterpart together, there was clearly a covenant for the hereditary performance of the services. KACHUR SERRA v. BENGAL SANTAPPAIA 7 Mad. 167

4. ———— Gift of Government promissory notes—Necessity of endorsement—Intention. The plaintiffs, M and R, were Parsis, and were married in the year 1851. The defendant was the widow of B M who was the father of the plaintiff B. The plaintiffs asked to recover from the defendant certain Government promissory notes which they alleged had been presented by B, to M at her marriage for her sole and separate use. They alleged that the said notes, then of the nominal value of from J, and draw the interest thereon for M; that B died in 1864, and that after his death the defendant, who was his widow and executrix, used to draw the interest for M; that in 1869 she obtained possession of the said notes, and had ever since continued in possession thereof, informing the plaintiffs that she was duly keeping them and collecting the interest for M; that the plaintiffs had been living with the defendant until shortly before the present suit, and, having then separated from her, had called upon her to hand over the notes and the accumulated interest, which she refused to do. The defendant denied that her husband B had presented M with Government notes for her separate use. She alleged that the notes which had been deposited by B with J were her own separate property, and not M's; that she and her husband had dealt from time to time with them, and that no interest was ever paid to the plaintiffs, or either of them, or for their benefit. She further stated that some of the notes which had been deposited with J had been disposed of by B in his lifetime with her consent; that in 1869 she obtained the remaining notes from J and sold them, and applied the proceeds to her own benefit. At the hearing, it was proved that on the occasion of the plaintiff's marriage presents were made to M both by her own family and by that of the bridegroom B. Two accounts were then opened in the books of the firm of J N & Co., of which M's grandfather J was a partner, one of which showed her acquisitions from her own family and the other her acquisitions from the family of her husband. The latter account contained an entry (under date August 1854) to the effect that the father-in-law of M had bought two Government notes for Rs. 500 in M's name, and had obtained the interest on them, which was duly credited to her. Other documents were produced, proved to be in the handwriting of B and J, in which the said Government notes were alluded to as the property of M and as having been purchased with her money. In 1864 B died without having endorsed the notes over to M or to any one in her behalf, and they remained in his name in the hands of J until 1869, when the defendant got possession of them. Held, that, the notes not having been endorsed to M, there was no valid gift of them to her by B. It B intended to bestow the notes as a gift only, without any intention that his purpose should be effected otherwise than by a substitution of ownership, his purpose remained unfulfilled, and the Court could not fulfil it for him. Without endorsement, or something equivalent, a gift of Government stock cannot be completed. Where a particular form of transfer is prescribed by law, a transfer in another form is as inefficient inter vivos as in a will. Held, further, that having regard to the over donor—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 16 and 17. The heir to a share in an ancestral estate, out of possession and at a time when he expected that his right would be contested by another claimant, made a gift of his title to his brother's son, providing that he, the donor, should have nothing to do with the cost of getting possession. After the donee had obtained possession, the donor sued to have the gift set aside. The gift, having been maintained in the first Court, was set aside by the Appellate Court on the ground that, it having been made without consideration and imprudently as regarded the donor's interests, he had had no opportunity to obtain any advice from an independent person, but had only had that advice which came from, or was given on behalf of, the

The deed in particular contained a clause absolutely excluding all claims which might be made in the future by the donor or by his heirs and representatives to the property, the subject of the deed. To facilitate the action of the Collector in obtaining the certificate of guardianship to the property of a Mahomedan minor, under the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), M, the uncle of the minor, relinquished in favour of the minor the share to which he was entitled in the property of his deceased brother, the father of the minor girl. The certificate was duly obtained by the Collector. The plaintiff, a judgment-creditor of M, then sued the minor for a declaration that M's not been accompanied and perfected by possession and that it was void against M's creditors under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), because it had been made with intent to defeat, delay or defraud them. The lower Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to show any legal right to renewal against the Government. Hill, on appeal, that the practice of insisting on endorsement of payments of interest on the note as a preliminary to receipt of interest thereon having rendered it practically un-negotiable, the Government were bound to renew the note. *MOONSHIJI DANI v. 2. — Theft of note—Purchaser, rights of—Tide. In the month of October 1878, a Government promissory note for B10,000 was sent from the A. Treasury to the Public Debt Office for encasement. The note was duly received at the office, and its receipt was entered in the proper book. The business of the Public Debt Office is carried on by certain officers of the B Bank. The note was stolen from the office, and endorsed over by the thief to a person who sold it to C for full value. The note bore two blank endorsements prior to that of the thief. In the same month C applied to the B Bank for a loan, which the Bank agreed to make upon the security of C's promissory note, and the deposit of Government notes. The form of application for the loan specified by their numbers the notes which were to be deposited. One of these was the stolen note. Before finally agreeing to the advance, the officers of the Bank in charge of the Loan Department sent the application, showing the numbers of the notes to the Public Debt Office, and received it back with a memorandum upon it to the effect that the notes were not stopped. On the 23rd October the loan was made, and the securities were given. Shortly afterwards, the theft was discovered and the note was stopped. In November the Bank, at the request of C, sent the note to the Public Debt Office for payment of interest, and the note was detained by the Superintendent. The Bank then required C to repay the amount of his loan. This he refused to do unless all his securities were handed over to him. In a suit

The Bank, therefore, as agents for the Government, on behalf of the true owner, from whom and on whose behalf they received it, had prima facie a better title than the thief or any one claiming through him, and C, in order to rebut that prima facie case, would have to show that he was a bona fide holder for value. In order to do so, he would have to prove that the note at the time when it was stolen, was a negotiable instrument, and thus he had failed to do, as he had not proved that the endorsements prior to that of the thief were genuine. *BANK OF BENGAL v. Those of the defendants who had purchased the Government promissory notes, contended that as innocent purchasers for value they were entitled to retain them. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover all the shares, debentures, and Government promissory notes from the defendants. Some of the Government promissory notes on which the forged endorsements had been made had been surrendered for renewal and fresh promissory notes issued in their place. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the renewed notes from the holders. HUSSRAJ PURMANAND v. XXV, 1802, s. 3—Inam—Tenancy not determinable at will of grantor's successor. Regulation XXV of 1802, s. 3, imposes restrictions on alienations only to secure the interests of the public revenue, and under it the zamindar has no power to disturb grants otherwise valid made by his predecessor or titles to inams acquired by prescription. An inam, existing under a grant made in 1811, became in 1863 the subject of arrangement between the zamindar, who had succeeded the grantor in the zamindari, and the inamdars. This resulted in what was either a confirmation of the original grant on terms more favourable to the zamindar, or a new grant of an estate in all respects, save as to the rent, similar to the previously existing estate, which was a tenancy in perpetuity. Subsequently the son and successor of the grantor of 1863 claimed to have determined the tenancy by a notice to quit. Held, that it was not determinable by such notice. MAHARAJA OF VIZIANAGRAM v. It is for the Government to determine how saranjams are to be held and inherited, and in cases where the Civil Courts have jurisdiction over claims relating to saranjams, in consequence of the non-applicability of the Pensions Act, XXIII of 1871, or otherwise they would be bound to determine such claims according to the rules, general or special, laid down by the British Government. In 1885 plaintiff brought this suit to recover possession of certain saranjam villages from the defendant. His beneficial right to a third share of the rents and profits of the villages was admitted by the defendant. The point in dispute was the possession and management. inter alia, that the khot derived his rights from the yearly kabulats passed by him, that his right to cultivate did not extend to cultivating the jungle land, and that his position was no better than that of a patel. The joint Judge who tried the suit held that under the settlement of 1783 the plaintiff as khot was entitled to the jungle-produce, except timber; that in virtue of Dnlop's proclamation of 1824 the plaintiff acquired an unqualified right to the forest land in the village and timber growing on it, and that the defendant had no right to appropriate assessed or unassessed land for forest purposes, and awarded the plaintiff the sum of Rs 600 as damages. In 1824 they cut down a large number of teak trees growing on this land. Thereupon the Secretary of State for India in Council sued to recover their value alleging that they were the property of Government. In 1832 the British Government granted to the plaintiff's father, Mahomed Ibrahim Makba, the village of Ransai on khoti tenure by a sanad which provided, inter alia, as follows:—(i) That the whole of the land waste in the year 1830-31 was granted as inam. (ii) That exclusive of this inam land, all the rest

Government a fixed sum of Rs 219 2 as. 33 rs. Clause 7th provided that the khot should allow the lands, which had been granted on maphi istara tenure to certain kowlars before the date of the sanad, to continue in their possession; that he should every year recover from them the Government dues and pay the same over to Government in addition to the amount stipulated with him on account of the khotship. Clause 9th provided that the holders of the suti lands in the village were the owners of those lands. Should a new survey be made and a new assessment settled, the same should be settled by Government for the holders of the suti lands agreeably thereto. From 1845 to 1871 the management of the khoti village was entrusted to the defendant as a maktadar, or lessee, under two kabulats passed by him—one in 1845 to Mahomed Ibrahim Makba, the grantee of the khoti village, and the other in 1858 to the grantee's heirs and legal representatives. By clause 5th of the kabuliat of 1858 the defendant agreed to carry on the cultivation and into prosperous state the waste, culturable, and unculturable land of the aforesaid village. I will take the proceeds of the same during the years of my contract. After the expiry of the years of the contract you are to take the assessment of the fields according to the practice of the village. I have nothing to do with the same. I will not let (the village) nor lease to any body for a longer period than for the period of the contract. If I let it, I will make good the damage you may suffer." In 1859 some of the maphi istara lands were sold by the Collector for arrears of assessment, and bought in by Government. The defendant applied to the Collector to have the lands transferred to him, and the Collector transferred them to his name. Shortly afterwards the defendant acquired some more lands, which were held on suti tenure in the village. He either purchased them or took them up on the tenants abandoning them. In 1861, when the survey was introduced into the village, he got his title to these lands recognized by the Superintendent of Survey. In 1871 the defendant's management of the village ceased. But he refused to deliver up to the plaintiff either the maphi istara or the suti lands which he had acquired during his management. The plaintiff therefore acquired and held them in trust for the plaintiff.

refused to accept suitably, the defendant denied that he had acted in fraud of the plaintiff's rights in acquiring the lands in dispute on his own account. Held, on the construction of the sanad, that, the plaintiff being the khot of the whole of the village exclusive of the land granted in insani, the maphi istara lands were included in the khoti grant; that the khot's interest in them, whatever might be the extent of it, was not separable from the khoti estate; and that the khot had a reversionary interest in the maphi istara lands as well as in the suti lands which had been abandoned by their former occupants.

that period the defendant was the maktadar or tenant of the plaintiff's khotship; and though a certain confidence was necessarily reposed in him in connection with a tenancy of this nature, and clause 7th of the Kabuliata of 1859, the defendant was at liberty either to take up waste lands himself or put in tenants; if he put in tenants on leases, the special advantages of any leases were to expire with his own lease. But the plaintiff's title to the lands in suit, acquired by the defendant, could therefore, without the intervention of the Collector, have taken up the maphi istara lands in suit and become himself the tenant; and he could have also acquired the suti lands from former sutidars, or taken them up, if waste, without the intervention of the Survey Superintendent. The circumstance that when acquiring the lands he needlessly invoked the assistance of the revenue authorities, would not invalidate his title if it could not be impugned on other grounds. Held, further, that the defendant was not guilty of fraud, as there was no evidence to show that he had acted in a surreptitious or secret manner in acquiring the lands in suit. On the contrary, his action in applying to the revenue authorities was a sign of his good faith rather than of any fraudulent intent. The plaintiff was therefore not entitled to oust the defendant from the lands in suit. FAZI ISMAIL v. MAHOMED ISMAIL. I. L. R. 12 Bom. 585

raj estate, in favour of non-existing covenantees, to give the villages to them in the event specified. Held, that in either view it was equally ineffectual. Held, also, that the High Court had correctly con-revenue due on the estate so assigned along with the land revenue for their own estate. The deed of settlement then went on to provide that, if at any time the heirs of the settlor, or whoever might be in possession of the rest of his estate, should demand from B, or the person in possession of the lands assigned to her, the revenue assessed on those lands, then B and her heirs would be entitled to claim and take possession of the legal share in the settlor's estate to which she would be entitled under the Mohammedan law of inheritance. Held, that, as regards a person who had acquired a portion of the settled property partly by private sale and partly by sale at auction, the settlement contravened the provisions of s. 6 of Regulation No. XXXI of 1803, and the heirs of the settlor could not be compelled to pay the land revenue due on the portion of the settled lands acquired by the said purchaser, nor had the purchaser any right under the deed of settlement to a proportionate part of the inheritance which would have come to Rahmat-un-nissa from her father. SABIB ALI v. 33. ——— Grant of portion of impartible zamindari—Absolute grant—Creation of separate estate in favour of grantee as between him and grantor—Restriction in instrument contravening Hindu law of inheritance. In a suit for the redemption of a portion of an impartible zamindari, the grantor's son, who was the plaintiff, claimed that the grant was an absolute grant, and that the grantee was to have a separate estate in the portion granted. The grant was made in favour of the grantee as between him and the grantor, and the grant was not subject to any restriction in the instrument. case of failure of self-begotten male issue in the grantee's line, the immovable property of the grantee should be put in possession of the grantor's line. On the death of the first grantee, the property passed into the possession of his two sons, and, on the death of the elder son, it came into the possession of the younger son. On his death without male issue, the estate passed into the possession of his widow defendant in the present suit. The plaintiff contended that the grant made to respondent's father-in-law was a maintenance grant; that under its terms the estate reverted to his father (now deceased) on the death of respondent's husband, when there was a failure of male heirs in his branch; and that, notwithstanding the grant, the members of the two branches did not fail to be co-parceners, and that consequently the right of survivorship of the plaintiff attached to the exclusion of the defendant. Held, that, on the construction of the instrument of grant, the estate became, by virtue of that instrument, the separate and absolute property of respondent's branch of the family, and that the provision in that instrument purporting to create a special right of reversion in case of failure of male issue contravened the principle laid down in the case of *Tagore v. representatives in title of the original founders, by whom they alleged the Tower had been erected after the land had, on the application of the founders, been granted to them in 1837 by the Hyderabad Government. The defence was that the grant relied on by the plaintiffs was a forgery, and that evidence supported the plaintiff's title. The document, on which they relied (which was held to be genuine), was issued by an Officer of the Hyderabad State, and purported to express a transaction, by which the State had assented to the grant of the land to the two founders by name, and directed possession of it to be delivered to them. That relied on by the defendants (which had also been applied for and obtained by the founders) was a document issued by order of the Military authorities, who could not be held empowered to alienate in perpetuity land forming part of the Cantonment for a purpose wholly inconsistent with military requirements. It was, moreover, not a grant, but a document giving permission to use the land, already conveyed, for the particular purpose of a Tower of Silence and to enclose the land, matters obviously within the discretion of the Commanding Officer as possibly affecting the convenient occupation of the cantonment. The effect of the two documents was to show a good title in the founders and not in the Parsi community. That view was confirmed by the fact that the founders admittedly enclosed the land and erected a Tower of Silence on it at their own expense; that they erected a Fire Temple in connexion with it on land acquired by private purchase, and that the evidence showed that the possession, management and control of the Tower of Silence and of the land, on which it stood, erection of the Tower (the events of which were more important than those in later years when the circumstances of the parties had somewhat changed) the priests referred such difficulties and questions as arose for the orders of the founders and obeyed those orders. *PRADHAN JIVANJI v. officer—Failure to reverse grant—Validity of grant. By the darkhast rules, as amended in 1894, an appeal is provided to a Divisional officer from the orders of a Tahsildar in respect of grants of building-sites. A Tahsildar passed an order granting an application for a building-site and an appeal was preferred therefrom to the Sub-Collector (the Divisional officer). This officer apparently referred the appeal to the Collector, who passed an order annulling the grant. The Collector's order was sent to the Divisional officer, who communicated it to the Tahsildar. On a suit being instituted by the applicant for a declaration of his title to the land—Held, that he had acquired a good title. The appeal lay to the Sub-Collector.

Collector has a revisional power similar to that given to him by the regulations in matters dealt with therein, and that the Collector's order on appeal to the Sub-Collector ought to be regarded as an order made by the Collector in the legal exercise of his revisional powers. The result was that the order of the Tahsildar granting the title had not been legally set aside, and the plaintiff had acquired a good title by virtue of the grant duly made by the Tahsildar. SAPPANI ASANI v. ians duly appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, having mortgaged property belonging to a minor to enable them to discharge debts binding on his estate, the mortgagee sued to recover the amount of principal and interest due. The necessity had been urgent, the terms of the deed fair, and the money had been duly applied; but the guardians had not obtained the sanction of the Court as directed by s. 29 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890. On its being contended that the mortgage was invalid and incapable of being enforced:—Held, that a mortgage so executed was not void, but only voidable; and that the defendant was entitled to avoid the mortgage, but only on the condition of restoring any benefit received by him thereunder to the person from whom it had been received. The fact that the person who had received the benefit was the defendant, did not alter his position. SINAYA PILLAI v. MUXISAMI ARYAN

S. 18 of the Act applies only to assignments which have been granted under that Act. An assignment of a mortgage, therefore, by a widow acting as natural guardian of her minor son, but who has not obtained a certificate under the Act, is not invalid, because effected without the sanction of the Court. Where a widow acting as natural guardian of her minor son assigned a mortgage which had been executed to her deceased husband for a consideration, a part of which was a sum due under a decree, to the assignee. Held, that the assignment was valid.

they dismissed the suit. On appeal to the High Court:—Held, that, although in ordinary cases it is the rule that, where an assignee sues on his assignment and proves it, an adverse party cannot take the objection that there was no consideration, yet that, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, the assignment had subsequently taken, the confirmation of the decree which formed part of the consideration not having been certified to the Court.

assignment was on behalf of a minor, and the person acting as his guardian had not admitted it, and it might be that even her admission would not be binding on him, since he was not a party to the suit. It was necessary that the point should be so tried and determined as to bind the minor, and to do that it was essential that he should be made a party to the suit. The Court, therefore, reversed the decree of the lower Courts and remanded the case. MANISHANKAR PRANJIVAN v. BAI BULI

On a question whether, there being no proof of the necessity or expediency of agreeing to pay interest at a rate so high as eighteen per cent, the agreement to pay at this rate was rightly set aside by the High Court, which decreed interest of twelve per cent:—Held, that the proper construction of the order, and the one most favourable to the lender regarding the rate of interest, was that the guardian was authorized to borrow only at a reasonable rate of interest, and that consequently the decree of the High Court was right. *GANGAPERSHAD SAHU v. It appeared that no formalities had been observed in coming to the partition, and no record preserved of the proceedings except a list representing the result arrived at; that the division was effected simply on reference to a thakbust map, on average rental per bigha taken as the basis thereof and a number of bighas allotted in proportion to each individual's share. None of the ordinary precautions were taken for the protection of the interest of minors. Held, that the partition was not made in such way, and under such circumstances as to be in itself obligatory on the minor, who had the option of

Under the Hindu law, the power of a manager for an infant heir to charge an ancestral estate is a limited and qualified one, to be exercised in a case of need, or for the benefit of the estate. Where the charge is one that a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate, the bond fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The lender is bound to enquire into the necessities for his charge, and he is not bound to see to the application of the money. The mere creation of a charge by a manager, securing a proper debt, cannot be viewed as improvident management; and a bond fide creditor should not suffer when he has acted honestly and with due caution, but is himself deceived. HUNDONAN PERSHAD PANDAY v. market value, by a sala-deed reciting that the object of the sale was the minor's maintenance and marriage. It was found that the sale was obtained by the vendee by taking advantage of the guardian's poverty, and that there was nothing to show that in purchasing the property he had satisfied circumstances of the minor did not by themselves constitute a sufficient legal necessity for such an alienation. Under the Hindu law, the maintenance or marriage of a minor may be a legitimista cause for the alienation of his property by the guardian, but cannot justify a Court of equity in upholding a bargain obviously imprudent and reckless. The best test is whether the alienation would have been reasonably and prudently made by the minor himself had he been of full age. Held, further, that, upon such an alienation being set aside in consequence of a suit brought by the minor, the vendee was entitled to be recouped by the plaintiff to the extent of any portion of the purchase money, which had been appropriated to the latter's benefit. *Paran Chandra Pal v. GUARDIAN AND MINOR—contd.

1. ————— Contract for sale by guardian of minor—Subsequent sale to third party—Sanction of District Judge—Sale, void or voidable—Specific performance
A certificated guardian of certain minors contracted to sell their property to the plaintiff for a consideration of Rs 217, of which Rs 30 was to be paid in cash and the balance of Rs 187 was to redeem a mortgage upon the property executed by the late father of the minors in favour of the plaintiff. The guardian undertook to obtain the sanction of the District Judge to the transaction. She afterwards fraudulently conveyed the property by registered deed to her relative, the defendant No 1, who was fully aware of the previous contract with the plaintiff. Held, that the sale to the plaintiff was not ipso facto void, but only voidable at the instance of any person affected thereby. That the plaintiff became entitled to obtain specific performance when, by finding that the sale to him was for the minor's benefit, the District Judge in effect sanctioned the sale. *ETWARIA v. The appointment of a guardian to a minor not being a matter of private right as between parties, is not a question which can be settled by reference to arbitration MAHADEO PRASAD v. BINDLASHI PRASAD (1903) . I. L. R. 30 All 137

4. ————— Bond by guardian—Liability of minor—Bond keeping alive debt incurred for necessities when binds minor's estate—Personal liability of minor—Limitation
The general proposition that a guardian of a minor cannot bind his ward personally by a simple contract debt, by a covenant or by any promise to pay money or damages, is subject to the modification that the promise will not bind the minor, unless it has been made merely to keep alive a debt, for which the ward's property was liable. *Indur Chander Singh v. not on the promise, but because the money has been supplied. Sundararaja Ayyangar v. Pattanathasami Tewar, 1 L. R. 17 Mad 396, referred to. It is established law that a guardian cannot land his ward's estate, except by a document purporting to bind it. Maharana Shri Ramulasingh v. Vakilul Vakhat Chand, 1 L. R. 20 Bom 61, followed. When a third person enters into dealings with the guardian of a minor, and advances money for necessities for the minor or for the benefit of the estate, and takes a bond for the debt from the guardian, the responsibility rests on him to take care that the bond is so drawn as to render the estate of the minor liable in law for the debt. Bhawal Singh v. Balj Nath Peetar Narain Singh (1907) . . . I. L. R. 35 Cal. 320
s.c. 12 C. W. N. 256

5. Minor bound by bond of guardian for existing liability binding on minor—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1859), s. 622—Material irregularity A bond executed by the guardian of a minor as such but which contains only a personal covenant by the guardian to pay and does not charge the minor's estate, will nevertheless be binding on the minor, if it is executed for a pre-existing debt, which is binding on him. A mistaken view of law by the lower Court is no ground for the interference of the High Court under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But where the case has not been properly heard by the lower Court and the mistake of law was probably the result of such defective trial, the High Court will interfere on the ground that the lower Court had acted with material irregularity within the meaning of the section. *Dutrasami Reddi v. Subsequently the guardian discovered that this was an inadequate price, and having received an offer of Rs. 25 for the property, went again to the District Judge for sanction to the second contract, obtained sanction and sold the property for Rs. 25. Held, that the former contract being to the detriment of the minor could not be specifically enforced. *Chittar Mal v. 2. Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 28, Sch II, Art 41—Sale in Art 41 not confined to transfer of absolute ownership only—Finding in previous suit of the invalidity of a sale does not dispense with the necessity of suing to set aside such sale The term 'sale' in Art 44 of Sch II of the Limitation Act is not confined to an assignment of absolute ownership only but means an assignment for a price of the ward's interest whatever that may be. Art 44 will therefore apply to a suit by the ward to set aside an assignment by his guardian of his right as mortgage. Gunnambhanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandarava, 1 L. R. 23 Mad 279, referred to and followed. A suit by a ward to recover properties improperly alienated by the guardian will be governed by Art. 44 and the period of limitation will not be that prescribed for a suit for possession of immovable property. The fact that in a previous suit by the alienee against the ward, to recover some properties which had not passed to his possession under the transfer, the alienation was found invalid will not relieve the ward from the consequences of his failure to have the transfer set aside within the period allowed by law with regard to properties which had passed to the possession of the alienee. When at the time such previous suit was brought, the ward's right to such property had been extinguished under s. 28 of the Limitation Act, the decision will not have the effect of reviving the extinguished right. *Lakshmi Dasa v. The Guardian and Wards Act makes no provision for setting aside an order made under the Act, but judging from the analogy of English practice there can be no doubt that in these miscellaneous matters the Judge sitting in Chambers and making orders on petitions and applications has the power to vary, alter, modify or set aside his own orders when he finds that the order is one which ought not to have been made and that the order is one that requires in the interests of justice to be dealt with in that way. 1883, i.e., prior to the passing of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act (Bombay Act VI of 1888) In 1893 the mortgagee sued on his mortgage and, without having the sanction of the Governor in Council, obtained an order in the District Court for the sale of the mortgaged property, that Court holding that the provisions of a 31, cl. 2, of Bombay Act VI of 1888 did not apply to the case of a mortgage effected prior to the passing of the Act. On appeal to the High Court:—Held, reversing the order of the District Court, that cl. 2 of s. 31 of Bombay Act VI of 1888 applied to the case, and that a sale in execution of a decree was such an alienation as came within the terms of the section and required the previous sanction of the Governor in Council. s. 31—Decree—Execution against Talukdar's estate—Consent of the Talukdar Settlement Officer—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 320, 323 In execution of a money-decree against a talukdar, several villages belonging to him were attached; and the darbhast was sent to the Talukdar Settlement Officer (who combined in himself the functions of Collector and Talukdar Settlement Officer for the purpose of execution of decrees against or in respect of talukdar lands) to be dealt with under ss. 320—323 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882. That officer acting under the sections framed a scheme of management and placed the decree-holder in possession of one of the villages for a given number of years. All this was done after the death of the original judgment-debtor and after the amendment of s. 31 of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act, 1888, was made in 1905, but in ignorance of the amendment. The Talukdar Settlement Officer then took up the position that what he had done was done by him under the Civil Procedure Code, 1882; and that as he had not given his written consent to the arrangement as provided by the amended s. 31, the darbhast preferred by the decree-holder should be disposed of. Per CHANDAVAKKAR, J. If a person holding a certain office is empowered by law in virtue of that office to give previous consent in writing to certain proceedings or acts as a condition precedent to their legality or validity, and the person as a matter of fact gives such consent, it cannot be the less a consent previously given in writing, merely because at the time of giving it he happened to be unaware of the law empowering him to consent, or being aware of it, he thought he was consenting in virtue of another office which he held. His ignorance of the law giving him the power cannot make the consent not a consent, and is no legal ground or excuse for withdrawing it after he has once given it. Where a certain act requires the concurrence of an official person, there is a presumption in favour of its due execution on the ground of the legal maxim omnia presumuntur rite et solemniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium. In such cases "everything is presumed to be rightly and duly performed until the contrary is shown." That presumption can be rebutted by proof that certain forms required by law were not complied with. Where the two offices are combined in one and the same person on grounds of public convenience or expediency, his action must be referred to the exercise of his discretionary powers under both the capacities if it can be so referred. s. 31 of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act (Bom. Act VI of 1888) requires that there must be (i) consent, (ii) it must be previous, and (iii) it must be in writing. Under this section the Commissioner is bound to exercise his discretion in each case. s. 6—License—License of public conveyance—Power of Commissioner of Police to grant license—Discretion to refuse license—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 45—Practice. S 6 of the Bombay Act VI of 1863 empowers the Commissioner of Police in Bombay to grant licenses for public conveyances, and provides that he "may in his discretion refuse to grant any such license for any conveyance which he may consider to be insufficiently found or otherwise unfit for the conveyance of the public." Under this section the Commissioner is bound to exercise his discretion in each case. This discretion is not an absolute one, but one which is to be exercised after he has made himself acquainted with the conveyance to be licensed and has considered whether it, as an individual carriage, is fit for the conveyance of the public. Where it appeared that the Commissioner of Police had approved of a certain pattern of victoria as a public conveyance in Bombay, and refused to license victorias which did not conform to that pattern. Held, that his refusal on that ground was illegal, and under s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act.

stated that he was acquainted with the handwriting of the writer, but he was not asked in examination-in-chief any question, which would elicit any of the several matters indicated in the explanation to s. 47 of the Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872). The witness was not cross-examined on the point. Held, that the law on the point is correctly stated in Taylor on Evidence to be as follows:—"A witness need not state in the first instance how he knows the handwriting since it is the duty of the opposite party to explore on cross-examination the sources of his knowledge, if he be dissatisfied with the testimony as it stands." Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 6, Illus. (a)—Murder—Res gesta—Statement of eye-witness shortly after occurrence, if relevant—Same transaction—Interval of time—Physical and mental condition of person making statement Hearsay evidence of the statement of a by-stander as to an occurrence would be admissible in evidence as a part of the res gesta only if it was made at the time the transaction was taking place or so shortly before or after it as to form part of the transaction. If the transaction had terminated when the statement was made, it would be irrelevant. In this case a chowkidar deposed that one G ran up to him and stated that he had seen the accused persons murder his mistress whom he had met by assignation and that he had run away from the place of occurrence to save his life. What interval of time passed between the murder and the alleged statement did not appear. G seemed to be quite sensible when he made the statement and the condition of his mind did not appear to be such as to exclude the supposition of his fabricating evidence or being tutored. Held, that the statement was inadmissible in evidence. Sarat Dhoobai's Case, I. L. R. 10 Calc 302, distinguished. CHAIN MARTO v. EMBEROR (1900) 11 C. W. N. 266 cognized vatandar in possession in 1805. She mortgaged two villages of the vatan to the father of the respondents. The latter two, after litigation, retained possession in 1886, by order of the Commissioner in the Revenue Department, until there should be a decree of Court to the contrary. The widow, according to the judgment below, had held the vatan adversely to her late husband's son, the plaintiff, who was born in 1818 of her co-widow, and he was the true heir, entitled from his birth. But the High Court gave effect to the adverse possession of the widow for the period of limitation supporting the mortgage. The plaintiff was the sole heir of the widow, his step-mother, who died in 1877. The appellant contended that the vatan, as inherited by him, was free from the mortgage encumbrance, and that he was entitled to possession. Held, reversing the decree of the High Court, that the mortgage was void against the heir, and had no force beyond the life of the vatandar who had executed it. The decree of the Subordinate Judge to that effect and for possession was maintained. PADAPA v. SWAMURAO SHANIVAS

The duties with which s. 4 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act (Bombay Act III of 1874) deals are confined to duties in which Government, as being responsible for the administration of the country, is directly interested. The definition of "hereditary office" does not extend to the duties of a carpenter, which, though useful to the village community, are not matters with which Government has any direct concern. Held, therefore, that the village satir (carpenter) does not hold an "hereditary office" within the meaning of that section. *Nasu v. The plaintiff, as the nearest heir of G, claimed the property, contending that V had not an "hereditary interest" in the vatan within the meaning of s. 4 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, that he was not a tatandar capable of taking under the will of G within the meaning of s. 5, and that the will of G was therefore inoperative. Held, that V had not "an hereditary interest" in the vatan, and that the devise to him was therefore inoperative. The expression in s. 4, "persons having an hereditary interest in a vatan," means persons having a present interest of an hereditary character in the vatan, and does not include persons who may have a spice succession, however remote.  Under s. 2 of Bombay Act V of 1896, if there is a male member of a vatan family, the succession goes to him in preference to a female member, and on his death the succession will go to his heirs with a similar provision. Where there is a male member qualified to inherit vatan property, he inherits, and a widow other than the widow of the last male member acquires no right to the vatan by succession or inheritance, and consequently she cannot create, transfer or revive any rights by adoption. A kulkarni vatan was owned by two brothers, A and B. B died first and A became the last male holder. A died in 1881, leaving a widow who held the vatan until her death in 1892. A vatan in Guzerat does not cease to be vatan property, as defined by s. 4 of Bombay Act III of 1874, merely because a service commutation settlement has been effected. Such a settlement does not change the nature of the property simply because service is not demanded. As far as the power of alienation is concerned, if it is granted by the settlement it cannot be taken away by the change introduced in s. 5 of Bombay Act III of 1874 by s. 1 of Bombay Act V of 1896. The plaintiff received moneys from time to time under his ment of a certain amount belonging to the vatan for arrears due to him under his decree. The money was accordingly attached. Subsequently the Collector issued a certificate to the Subordinate Judge, who had attached it for the removal of the attachment under Bombay Act III of 1874, s. 10. The Subordinate Judge accordingly ordered it to be removed, and his order was affirmed by the Assistlishing his right to be an hereditary deputy deshpande, he was entitled to the benefit of s. 56 of Bombay Act III of 1874. Plaintiff obtained a money-decree against H, and in execution sought to attach and sell a decree obtained by H against M, which entitled H to receive annually a certain portion of the rozina allowance paid by Government to M as kazi. H contended that the rozina allowance was paid to M and his family for service as kazi, and that therefore it was not liable to the process of a Civil Court under s. 13 of Bombay Act III of 1874. This contention was upheld by both the lower courts. Held, that, as the kazi's office was not a hereditary service vatan, plaintiff's rights to attach the decree obtained by H against M was not barred

(c)—Right of suit—Jurisdiction of Revenue Court—Jurisdiction of Civil Court.* The payments referred to in s. 17 of Bombay Act III of 1874 are those mentioned in s. 4, namely, "customary fees or perquisites in money or in kind, whether at fixed times or otherwise." It is the commutation of these customary and fluctuating payments that is provided for by ss 17 to 21. But the Collector has no power under s. 17 to impose new burdens on the land-owner in cases where, the payment being constant already, there is nothing to determine. Plaintiff was the inamdar of a certain village. Defendant No. 3 was the vatandar hulkarni of the village. He enjoyed, for the performance of his duties, some inam lands and a cash allowance of Rs 5 paid annually by the inamdar. In 1884, defendant No. 3 having failed to perform the service in person or by deputy, the increased his remuneration according to the scale fixed for Government villages known as the Wingate scale, and ordered plaintiff to pay the increased remuneration, so as to make up the amount due under that scale. On 20th September 1890, the Collector recovered the sum of Rs 171 from the plaintiff by attachment of his property. The plaintiff thereupon sued the Secretary of State for India in Council to recover this amount as being illegally levied. The defendant pleaded that the Collector, having determined the amount of de-

1. ——— Legislative power of the Governor-General in Council—Stat. 24 &

Governor-General in Council, and the town and fort of Jhansi are subject to the jurisdiction of the High Court for the N.-W. Provinces in the same manner as the rest of the Jhansi District. The Governor-General in Council has power to make laws and regulations binding on all persons within the Indian territories under the dominion of Her Majesty, no matter when such territories were acquired. His legislative powers are not limited to those territories which, at the date when the Indian Councils Act (24 & 25 Vict., c. 67) received the royal assent (i.e., the 1st August 1861), were under the dominion of Her Majesty. In the preamble to the 28 & 29 Vict., c. 17, and in s. 1 of the 32 & 33 Vict., c. 98, Parliament has placed this construction upon s. 22 of the Indian Councils Act. Even if that construction was erroneous, it has been so declared by Parliament as to make its adoption obligatory. Though a mistaken opinion of the Legislature concerning the law does not make the law, yet it may be so declared as to operate in future. Postmaster General of the United States v. Early, Curtis Rep. U. S. 86, referred to. It must be presumed that the laws and regulations of the Governor-General in Council are known to

373; and Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sitanantha Perumal Selkurayar, 14 Moo. I A. 570, referred to. The dictum of the Lords of the Privy Council in The Collector of Madura v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy, 12 Moo. I A. 397, that the duty of European Judges administering the Hindu law is not so much to inquire whether a disputed doctrine is deducible from the earliest authorities as to ascertain

Hindu law. In that case no inflexible rule was laid down assigning supreme and infallible authority to the Dattaka Mimamsa in questions connected with Benares school. The text of the child must years, is assigned to that or necessarily intended to be universally applicable, and admits of a construction which would confine the application of the text to Brahmins intended for the priesthood, and various other equally plausible interpretations have been adopted by other authorities. This being so, it would be unsafe to act upon the text in question and upon the interpretation placed upon it in the Dattaka Mimamsa so as to set aside an adoption which took place many years ago, which had ever since been recognized as valid, and under which the adoptee had ever since been in possession of his adoptive father's estate upon the single ground that at the time of the adoption the adopted son was more than five years of age. According to the Kalika Purana as interpreted by the Dattaka Mimamsa of Nanda Pandita, an adoption in the Dattaka form is wholly null and void if made after the adoptee has completed the fifth year of his age. It is a mistake to hold that, according to the Dattaka Mimamsa, so

... passed the fifth anniversary of his birth. It indicates, on the contrary, that he is in his fifth year. Thaloor Oomrao Singh v. Thalooram Mohab Koonwar, 1 N. W. 103a, dissented from. Chandra Sahai v. Lekhraj Singh

A question having arisen as to whether the presence of the widowed mother-in-law was equivalent to consent on her part to the adoption. Held, that mere presence is not necessarily equivalent to consent, for consent in this connection implies an intelligent concurrence on due consideration, and it is for the Court to determine whether the whole circumstances of the case invite the inference that such a consent had been given, bearing in mind that the consent required is a matter not of form, but of substance. *Bhimsappa v. The conjecture that the testator really meant to give authority to the widow to adopt, restricting her power merely to the extent that there should be others, his executors, who were to consent to the choice of a boy to be adopted by her, could not be accepted as a legitimate construction of the will. An authority to adopt given to two widows jointly is not invalid and may be exercised by one after the death of the other. An adoption made under coercion is not void, but voidable and will be valid, if ratified subsequently. If no one's interest is prejudicially affected by such ratification before it is made. The adoption into another family of the only surviving member of a joint family, in whom the family estate has vested solely and absolutely, does not, in law, operate to divest him of his rights in such estate. VENKATA NARASIMHA AYYA Row v SRIKANTHA AYYA Row and others (1905) . possessed of considerable ancestral property. One of them died on 14th September 1900 without male issue but leaving his widow pregnant. The other brother died on 17th December 1900 leaving a will, dated 30th November, by which he purposed to make certain dispositions of the family property and also authorized his widow to adopt a son with the consent of persons specifically mentioned in the will: "such adoption to be made even though a son is born to my brother's widow." On 18th December his brother's widow gave birth to a son, the plaintiff. On 17th February 1901, the testator's widow adopted a son to her husband with the consents directed in the will. It was contended that on the face of the will the adoption was illegal and void because the power to adopt was part of a plan for the disposition of the family property which was in contravention of the law, and the power was dependent on that plan having effect. Held, on the construction of the will, that the dispositions made were within the testator's competence at the date of the will and at the date of his death; they were only liable to be defeated in one event (which in fact happened), namely, his brother's widow giving birth to a son.

Second birth—Age of adoptee. As understood in the Hindu law, adoption is itself a "second birth" proceeding upon the fiction of law that the adoptee is "born again" into the adoptive family. The male issue being favoured existence of mainly for the sake of the parent's beatitude in the future life, adoption is a sacrament justified under certain conditions when the natural male offspring is wanting. It is effected by a substantial adherence to ceremonies, but principally by the acts of giving rites of initiation. According to Manu, in the case of the three "twice-born" classes the turning point of the "second birth," which means purification from the sin inherent in human nature, is represented by the ceremony of upanayana or investiture of the sacred thread hallowed by the gayatri, and until the performance of this ceremony, the person concerned, though born of twice-born parents, remains on the same level as a Sudra. The ceremony is, moreover, the beginning of his education in the duties of his tribe, as prescribed by Manu. The adoption had not been questioned except in 1256 (1849), when the defendant sued the plaintiff, who was then still a minor, through his guardian, and obtained possession from the plaintiff of certain of the property of the deceased, on the ground that the adoption was invalid. The plaintiff now, within twelve years of such dispossession, sued to recover possession stating that the decree in the former suit had been obtained by the defendant in collusion with the guardian. The defence was, that the adoption was invalid, the proper ceremonies not having been performed. The Court refused to entertain such defence. Per BAYLEY, J.—Ceremonies which are necessary to be observed for a valid adoption among Hindus of the superior classes are not necessary in the case of an adoption by a Sudra. In the case of adoption by a Sudra of a brother's son, mere giving and taking may be sufficient to make the adoption valid. NIPTANEND GHOSE v. KRISHNA DOYAL GHOSE, 7 B. L. R. 1: 15 W. R. 300

58. — Gayawal priests—Custom—Agreement between adoptive mother and adopted son, not depending upon the validity of the adoption—Revocation of agreement—Contract of service—Termination on notice—Employment of priest. Plaintiff, the widow of a Gayawal priest, purported to adopt the defendant, a married man, twenty-four years of age, in accordance with an alleged custom by which it was said the childless widow of a Gayawal priest is allowed to make such an adoption in order that the adopted son may get his feet worshipped by the clientele of her family for her own immediate benefit and ultimately for the benefit of the adopted son who takes by inheritance her estate as well as the estate of her husband. The son so adopted was, it was further alleged, liable according to the said custom to be dismissed for misconduct. At the time of the adoption the plaintiff executed a deed which recited the fact of the adoption having been made pursuant to the above custom and specified the circumstances under which the adoption might be cancelled. The alleged custom not having been established. Held, that the adoption was not valid either as a dattak or a krutima adoption, the necessary rites and ceremonies not having been performed and the defendant having already been invested with the sacred thread, married and had a son at the time of adoption, that the transaction was essentially a contract to enable the plaintiff to keep up her connection, spiritual as well as worldly, with her husband's clientele and to enjoy the benefits resulting from such connection, and this contract did not depend for its validity upon the validity of the adoption and was consequently enforceable. That the contract was not determinable at the mere choice of the plaintiff. The contingencies which in the contemplation of the parties was to terminate the contract not having arisen, the plaintiff was not entitled to rescind the contract. *Manley v. L. and N.W. Railway, L. deceased, was an assent by a sapinda to an adoption by a widow sufficient to support her adopting in the absence of an authority from her husband. It was decided that under all the circumstances under which this child had been applied for by the widow and given by the father, the assent of the latter was not one which had rendered the adoption valid as against the brothers. There was no sufficient evidence to show that the widow applied to the boy's father to give his assent as sapinda to an adoption, on the ground that he could not adopt without the sapinda's assent. 63. ————— Adoption by widow of a predeceased son.—Consent of mother-in-law.—Rule that adoption must be by widow of the last full owner.—Exceptions to this rule. By Hindu law as settled by judicial decisions, it is only the widow of the last full owner who has the right to take a son in adoption to such owner, and a person in whom the estate does not vest cannot make a valid adoption so as to divest (without their consent) third parties, in whom the estate has vested, of their proprietary rights. To this rule there are four exceptions: (i) In the case of co-widows. Though, on the death of the husband without male issue, the estate vests in all his widows, it has been held that the elder widow can, by adopting a son with the express or implied permission of her husband, divest the co-widow or widows of their vested rights. The consent of such younger widows has not been held to be essential. (ii) In the case of a mother who succeeds as heir to an unmarried son, legitimate or adopted, who dies after his father. In such a case

while any difficulty as to the inheritance and the death, his estate vested in his widow U. In 1879 S, with U's consent, adopted a son (defendant No. 3). The plaintiff in this suit sued to recover certain land which formed part of B's estate, alleging that it had been given to him by U. The first defendant alleged and proved that he had bought the land from the third defendant, who was the adopted son of S. Held (dismissing the suit), that the adoption

68. ——— Mother—Adoption by a mother succeeding to her son who has been married—Ceremonial competency of the son no bar to the adoption—Only limitation to a mother's right to adopt. A mother succeeding as heir to her deceased son, who has left neither widow nor issue, is competent to adopt, notwithstanding the fact that her deceased son had attained ceremonial competency by marriage, investiture or otherwise, before his death. The real limitation on a mother's right to adopt when she succeeds as heir to her son does not depend upon the investiture, marriage or ceremonial competency of her deceased son, but upon the question whether by such adoption she derogates from any other rights save her own Jivaj Krishna, the holder of a kulkarni watan, mortgaged the watan lands to the defendants in 1879. He died in 1884, at the age of thirty, without issue. His wife had predeceased him, and his mother Tulsava therefore succeeded as heir. In 1894 she adopted the plaintiff and died shortly afterwards. In 1896 the plaintiff brought this suit to set aside the mortgage and recover the mortgaged lands. The defendants contended, inter alia, that Tulsava's right to adopt had been extinguished because her deceased son had been married and had attained ceremonial competency, and that the plaintiff's adoption was therefore invalid and his suit could not be maintained. Held, that the plaintiff's adoption by Tulsava was valid, inasmuch as it only affected her own interests and did not affect the vested rights of others. *VENKATAPPA BAPU v. properly, alleging that he had been adopted by the defendant, a widow of the same caste. The defendant denied the adoption, and contended that it was invalid, inasmuch as he was an only son, and had been given in adoption by his widowed mother without an express authority from her husband. The plaintiff, in support of his adoption, produced two documents executed by the defendant, viz., a deed of adoption and a compromise in which the defendant had ratified the plaintiff's adoption. It was found that the defendant was very young, and did not act independently in the execution of those documents. Held, that the adoption was invalid on two grounds, viz., 1st, that the mother had no authority to give the plaintiff in adoption, because he was the only son of her deceased husband at the time of the adoption; and, 2ndly, that the defendant (whether an infant or not) was not, either at the time of the alleged adoption or at that of the alleged ratification of it, a free agent, but was subject to undue influence. 70. ————— Sister's son, mother's sister's son, and daughter's son. The adoption of a mother's sister's son by a Hindu of any of the three regenerate classes, Brahmins, Kshatriyas, and Vaisya, equally with the adoption of a daughter's son or a sister's son is contrary to law and void. The ancient texts condemning such adoptions are not only admonitions, but have been judicially decided to be prohibitions of law for such a length of time that it is now not competent to a Court to treat them as open to question in this respect. The judgment in Collector of Madras v. Mootoo Ramalinga Sathupathy, 12 Moo I.A. 437, gives no countenance to the conclusion that, in order to bring a case under any rule of law laid down by recognized authority for Hindus generally, evidence must be given of actual events to show that in point of fact the people subject to that general law regulate their lives by it. *BHADWAN SINGH v. A Hindu of the Sudra class dies, leaving him surviving his mother and the paternal grand-mother. After his death, his grand-mother adopted the defendant. Subsequently to this adoption, the deceased's mother adopted the plaintiff. Thereupon both plaintiff and defendant claimed the deceased's estate. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. The deceased's mother having succeeded as heir to her son, her mother-in-law could not by any adoption divest her of her rights as such heir without her consent. monies, it must be assumed that the widow had power to make a second adoption, and that such adoption was to her husband. Held, therefore, that the adoption of the plaintiff was valid and effective. Held, also, that the effect of the second adoption being to make the second adopted son the son of the deceased husband, he must be treated as if he had been born, or at all events conceived, in the husband's lifetime, and his title related back to the death of the elder brother, the first adopted son, so that, if the elder brother left no widow or child who would succeed him to the exclusion of his younger brother, the second adopted son would succeed as heir to the father. *Sheo Singh Rai v. That the terms and conditions specified and contained in cls. 1 and 2 and 3 of this agreement shall have full effect and be considered as valid and operative in every respect, any provision of law or the Hindu Shastras to the contrary notwithstanding. The plaintiff alleged that since he had attained majority he had always repudiated the validity of the agreement as affecting his rights in any way. The plaintiff also alleged that on the Dassara day of 1883 the defendant assembled her friends and relatives, and in view of the approaching majority of the plaintiff, which he attained on the 14th December 1883, announced her intention of making him her son.

might have been entitled under the said agreement, etc. The defendant admitted that she had performed certain ceremonies which she intended to be an adoption of the plaintiff as son of V; but she alleged that at the time of the said adoption she had not, nor had she since, undergone tonsure; and that, according to the custom of the Dairadnya community, to which she and the plaintiff belonged, a widow could not adopt until her head had undergone tonsure. She also stated that the majority of her caste had declared the said adoption to be invalid, and she submitted that, in consequence of this, the adoption was null and void.

and conditions contained therein, as she would not, except upon those terms and conditions, have adopted him. She further contended that on the death of her husband, the plaintiff was adopted by her.

From the evidence it appeared that the requisite religious ceremonies had been performed. Before the defendant took part in them, Shastris were consulted as to whether the defendant, while untoued, could properly do so, and on making certain expiatory gifts she was pronounced competent. Under such circumstances, the Court could not hold her to be incompetent. Even if requisite rites with the assistance of priests and in accordance, with the opinions of Shastris, the Court will uphold it, even against the opinions of other Shastris expressing or entertaining contrary views. Held, that the effect of the agreement of the 18th April 1878 was to give the defendant the beneficial ownership of the estate for her life, with the largest possible discretionary powers of management, subject to the duty of maintaining and educating the plaintiff. Held, also, following Chittha v. Janaki, 11 Bom. 199, that the agreement was valid and binding on the plaintiff, and that the defendant had not waived the benefits to which she was entitled under its provisions. *RAVI VINAYAKHAR JAGANNATH SHANKARSETT v. and in the suit arising thereupon—Bhoolnarmoyee Debia v. Ramkishore Achari Chowdhry, 10 Moo. I. 479—it was decided that, the son's widow having acquired a vested interest, a new heir could not be so substituted for her. Held, that, although such a substitution might have been disallowed without the adoption being held invalid for all other purposes, the above decision had determined that, upon the vesting of the estate in the widow, the power of adoption was incapable of execution, and was at an end, and that this would have been the conclusion if the question of the validity of the power had been raised without any previous decision upon it. An adopted son occupies the same position in the family of the adopter as a natural-born son, except in a few instances which are accurately defined both in the Dattaka Chandrika and Dattaka Mimamsa, governing authorities in the Bengal school. 32. — Widow with express authority from her husband to adopt—Adoption by such widow cannot divest estate vested by inheritance devolved from a lineal heir of the husband—Adoption by elder brother's widow after younger brother's death. K and his two sons, B and N, were members of an undivided family. B died first, leaving a widow: then K died. On his death N succeeded to the family property. N afterwards died, leaving him surviving his widow, the defendant G, who then got possession of the said property. After N's death, however, B's widow adopted the plaintiff as son to her husband, and he brought this suit against G to recover the property from her. He alleged that B in his lifetime, with the concurrence of K, had given express authority to his wife to adopt a son after his death. The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree. On appeal, the District Judge rejected his claim. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court. Held, confirming the decree of the lower Court, that the plaintiff was not, by virtue of his adoption, entitled to oust the defendant G from the estate of her husband. At the time of his death, N was full owner as last survivor of the joint family. The property then devolved as his, and a subsequent adoption, however well authorized to B, a collateral heir of N, could not divest the defendant G, who did not claim through B at all. If the question had arisen between the plaintiff and N, the plaintiff would have been entitled to succeed. VIRADA PRATAPA Raghunada Deo v. Brojo Kishore Poffa Deo, I. L. R. 1 Mad at p. 83. I. L. R. 3 I. A. at p. 193, referred to. Adoption by a widow under her husband's authority has the effect of divesting an estate vested in any member of the undivided family of which the husband was himself a member. But it does not divest the estate of one on whom the inheritance has devolved from a lineal heir of the husband.

This rule, however, must be supplemented by the addition that the adoption, though authorized by the husband, cannot divest the estate vested in a collateral relation of the husband in succession to some other person who had himself become owner in the meantime. CHANDRA v. GOJARABAI

33. — Effect of an adoption by a co-widow after the estate has been vested in the other widow—Divesting of estate—Sale in execution of decree—Salable interest. A Hindu, governed by Mitakshara law, died, leaving him surviving two widows, G and B, and a son S by G. By a will he authorized his widow, B, to adopt a son, in the event of dying unmarried; but he made no disposition of his property, which was left to devolve according to Hindu law. S died unmarried in the year 1290 (1883), and B adopted a son in the same year, to which adoption G was not a party. In the year 1296 (1889), in order to liquidate debts of their husband, the widows executed a mortgage-bond in favour of one F, who obtained a decree in 1299 (1892). In execution of that decree, the mortgaged properties were sold and purchased by a third party. On an application made by the auction-purchaser to set aside the sale, on the ground that the judgment-debtors had no salable interest in the property, as it had upon the adoption vested in the adopted son. Held, that, as an adopted son is not entitled to claim as preferential heir the estate of any other person besides his adoptive father when such estate has vested before his adoption in some heir other than the widow who adopted him, the adoption by B could not have the effect of divesting G of the estate which had devolved upon her as heir of her son, and if that was so, it could not be said that the judgment-debtors had no salable interest in the property, and therefore the sale could not be set aside. Held, also, that G was not under any such religious obligation to give her assent to the adoption by B as should have the effect of divesting her of the estate. *Lakshman Dada Naik v. In March 1892, S adopted the plaintiff G, who was older than herself, as son to her husband, alleging that she had R's permission to do so. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that as adopted son of B he was entitled to succeed as heir to the property of R as against the defendant V, who claimed to have been adopted by Saibai as son to R. The lower Appellate Court disallowed the plaintiff's adoption on the grounds that Saibai had not consented to it. Thus, if a widow before the adoption severs a portion of the inheritance therefrom and transfers it to a stranger, without any proper or necessary purpose binding the estate absolutely according to Hindu Law, the transfer, logically speaking, must cease to have any effect after the adoption, since it could only operate during the time that the estate was represented by her as heir and the result of the adoption is to terminate that estate. *Lakshman v. In 1851 she adopted a son, who attained his majority in 1865, and in 1866 sued for possession of the property. Held, that the possession of the widow previous to the adoption was not that of a trustee for the son to be adopted so as to prevent limitation. *OSIND CHANDRA SARMA MAZOONDIR v. The widow did not exercise that power and many years after her husband's death brought a suit in her character as widow claiming his succession in the family estates. Held, that the mere fact of there being authority given her by her husband to adopt a son, did not, before an adoption had actually taken place, supersede and destroy her personal right as widow to sue. *BANUNOSS MOOKERJEE v. 2. ———— Adoption by a widowed daughter-in-law under the direction of the father-in-law after his death—Disposal of the estate of daughters—Adoption invalid. A Hindu testator died leaving him surviving two daughters and a widowed daughter-in-law. In his will he made the following provision—"I wanted to dispose of the above-mentioned property myself. But as I am ill, it is not possible for me to do so. Therefore the Panch should give a boy in adoption to my daughter-in-law and (thus) keep (the doors of) my house open. After the death of the father-in-law, the widowed daughter-in-law adopted a boy under the said provision. The adopted boy having subsequently brought a suit for a declaration of his title as the grandson of the testator the validity of the adoption was impeached by one of the daughters of the testator, whose interest became devested by the adoption. Held, that the adoption was invalid. From the fact that a husband's authority to his widow to adopt may be operative after his death, it does not follow that a father-in-law's assent survives beyond his lifetime so as to enable his son's widow to direct an estate that had already devolved by inheritance on heirs, who did not derive a title through the son. *LAKSHMI v. 3. ———— Suit to establish adoption—Test of validity of deeds of adoption. In cases of adoption careful scrutiny is necessary. The party seeking to establish an adoption is bound to produce the best evidence procurable. The rule for testing the validity of a deed of adoption is contemporaneity of execution and publication of the deed of permission. In the absence of the original deed, all the circumstances bearing upon the alleged deed, and all the probabilities for and against its genuineness, must be considered. *ROOPHONJORLE CHOWDHRAIN v. 4. ———— Adoption by dharm-putr—Ceremony of dharm-putr. An adoption made by a Patee immediately before his death would render extremely improbable the execution of a will by him a very short time previous thereto, and therefore call for very clear proof to establish its existence. Although in cases of adoption by dharm-putr (a partial adoption) it is not indispensably necessary that a declaration should be made on the third day after the decease, yet it is usual to make such a declaration and to take a writing from the dharm-putr. In the absence of any such writing and upon the whole evidence, the adoption in this case was pronounced to be as a paluk-putr, and not merely as a dharm-putr. *HOWABHARE v. The plaintiff's claim rested on the contention that the formalities required to validate an adoption had not been attended to in this case. This contention was met by the plea that the adoption was complete, but that, even if it had not been so, a document declaring the deceased proprietor's desire to adopt the minor had the effect of a testament. Held by the High Court, that, though the intention of the deceased proprietor to adopt the minor was clear, that intention, even as expressed in the above-mentioned document, which was not testamentary in character, did not amount to an adoption in the absence of the necessary formalities. The estate was accordingly declared liable for the amount of the decree against the cousin and heir. BANFE PERSHAD v COURT OF WARDERS . 25 W. R. 182

In a suit in which a claim was made in virtue of an alleged adoption to the estate of a deceased Hindu, the widow made a compromise, not in writing, with the claimant where the adoption was admitted, but alleged to have been on condition that the widow should enjoy the entire property for her life without power of alienation, and that, after her death, her minor daughters should take the self-acquired property, and the claimant should succeed to the ancestral estate. Held, that the evidence to establish such a conditional adoption must, as in the case of a nuncupative will, be very strong. INRIT KOWAR v ROOF NARAIN SINGH . 6 C. he would wish, fulfil the rights of adoption in accordance with the Shastras and the usage of the country, and from that day the natural father would have no claim or right in respect of the said son. Held, that this deed did not of itself operate to effect an adoption. It did not even amount to a giving and taking of the boy, as it contemplated the subsequent performance of the necessary rites. Held, further, that deeds of this kind did not take the place of the necessary evidence as to the actual adoption. MINDIR KOER v. Where it was sought to set aside an adoption which took place many years ago, which had ever since been recognized as valid and under which the adoptee had ever since been in possession of his adoptive father's estate, on the single ground that at the time of the adoption the adopted son was more than five years of age, it was held that the onus of proof was upon the person who alleges the adoption to be invalid. Haimun Chull Singh v. question of that kind the solution of which must be dependent upon evidence. The main defence to the suit was that the assent of the appellants' father to the transactions in dispute, not only estopped him from contesting the validity of the alienations, but created an estoppel binding his sons, the appellants. As showing this a document dated 3rd September 1871 was produced which, after reciting that except his mother there was no heir to or claimant of the adopted son's property, stated that the widow agreed that during the mother's lifetime she should remain in possession of a half share of the property, and that after the death of the mother and the widow both the shares should devolve by inheritance on the sons of the mother, who were the natural brothers of the adopted son. as the essence of the transaction, and such texts may be sufficiently imperative to vitiate an adoption in which they have been disregarded; but unless their meaning is undoubted, the doctrine of factum valet should be restricted to adoptions which, having been made in substantial conformity to the law, have infringed minor points of form or selection. Adoption under the Hindu law being in the nature of a gift, it contains three elements—capacity to give, capacity to take, and capacity to be the subject of adoption—which are essential to the validity of the transactions, and as such are beyond the scope of the doctrine of factum valet. *Uma Devi v. ## 11. TERMS OF ADOPTION.

1. Adoption—Agreement limiting property to be taken by minor adopted son—Validity. A Hindu widow, in pursuance of authority given by her husband, wife deceased, adopted plaintiff, a minor. A registered document was executed by the widow on the day of the adoption, wherein the fact of the adoption was recited and certain terms were set forth as to the manner in which the property of the deceased adoptive father should be enjoyed as between the plaintiff and the widow. By those terms it was declared that, in the event of disagreement between plaintiff and his adoptive mother, the property described in the second schedule should be enjoyed by the latter during her life, and should be taken by the plaintiff after her death. The authority, under which the widow adopted, had been given orally, and merely enabled her to adopt a son, and made no reference to the manner in which the estate of the deceased should be enjoyed either by the son or the widow. The effect of the arrangement was to vest in the widow on the contingency mentioned, for her life, about a moiety of the property inherited by her from her husband. The terms embodied in this agreement were consented to by the plaintiff's natural father prior to the adoption, and it was in consequence of such consent that the adoption took place and the document was executed. Disagreements arose between plaintiff and the widow, and plaintiff, still a minor, sued through his natural father as next friend to recover all the property of his deceased adoptive father. Held, that the provision in the document in favour of the widow was binding on the plaintiff and the widow was entitled to enjoy the property in the second schedule during her lifetime. VISALAKSHI AMMAL v. SIVARAMU (1904). 1 L. R. 27 Mad. 13

12. ADOPTION DURING WIFE'S PREGNANCY.

3. Adoption during wife's pregnancy. Held, that the fact that at the time of making an adoption the wife of the adopting father is pregnant does not affect the validity of the adoption. Nagabhusanam v. Sethanmagan, 1 L. R. 3 Mad. 180, and Hanmant Ramchandra v. Bhimacharya, 1 L. R. 12 Bom. 105, followed. Narayana Reddi v. Varduchala Reddi, (1939) M. S. D. 97, dissented from. DULAT RAM v. RAM LAL (1907). 1 L. R. 29 All. 310

23. CONSIDERATION FOR GIVING IN ADOPTION.

Adoption—Receipt of consideration by natural father for giving in adoption does not make the adoption invalid. Where a boy, being a fit subject for adoption in the Dattaka form, is given and accepted, with the proper ceremonies for such adoption, by persons respectively competent to give and accept him, he acquires the status of an adopted son. The receipt of money by the natural father in consideration of giving his son and the payment of such by the adoptive father, though illegal and opposed to public policy, do not make the adoption invalid, as the gift and acceptance of the boy is a distinct transaction clearly separable from the illegal agreement and payment. Such payment has not the effect of converting the adoption into an 'affiliation by sale,' a form now obsolete. Manganeer pathran is synonymous with Dattaka son. Bhuvan Rabidat Singh v. Indar Kunwar, 1 L. R. 16 Cal.

On the construction of an ikardama or deed of agreement and partition of an ancestral estate among several brothers:—Held, that the terms of the deed were not restrictive upon the power of each brother to alienate his separate share. A, one of the brothers had his share registered on the Collector's books as owner, and by deed of sale conveyed such share to his daughter, who was also his heir. The Collector on the objection of one of A's brothers (who denied A's right to alienate, on the ground that it was ancestral property), refused to register the daughter's name as proprietor. Held, that the Collector was bound by Bengal Regulation VIII of 1800, s. 21, to register her name as purchaser, but that such mutation of name was to be without prejudice to the question of the right of succession. *COWLEAS KOONWAR v. defendant's father as a son-in-law, who should take his property as if a son. On the death of M, the 1st defendant's father entered into possession of the property, and afterwards, during the minority of his son (1st defendant), associated with himself the plaintiff on promise of a share. In accordance with this agreement, the plaintiff joined the 1st defendant's family and continued for many years aiding in the management and improvement of the property, until, a short time before the present suit was brought, the 1st defendant turned the plaintiff out of doors and refused to give him the promised share. Upon these facts:—Held per HOLLOWAY and INNES, JJ., that the 1st defendant's father was what is called in English law a purchaser and had all the powers of disposition existent over self-acquired property; that also there was a complete adoption or ratification of the father's contract by 1st defendant and that he ought to be held to it. Per INNES, J.—That the right of 1st defendant's father to dispose of property self-acquired might depend upon whether 1st defendant was or was not in being at the date of the acquisition. CHALLA PATI REDDI v. 28. ——— Family distress—Pious purposes—*Mitakshara law. According to the Mitakshara law, a father is not incompetent to sell immovable property acquired by himself. Landed property acquired by a grandfather, and distributed by him amongst his sons, does not by such gift become the self-acquired property of the sons, so as to enable them to dispose of it by gift or sale without the consent and to the prejudice of the grandson. The sale by a father of ancestral immovable property, without the concurrence of his sons, is not necessarily void, though it may be the assets of the joint family; and therefore, if the son seeks the aid of the Court to set aside the purchase, he must do equity and offer to repay the purchase-money, unless he can show that no part of such purchase-money or the produce of it has ever come to his hands. MUDDUN GOPAL THAKOOR v. There being nothing amounting to any voluntary representation by T S of his having any right or interest in the property, or any representation of fact made by T S in order to induce D to advance the money, and nothing to show that there was no other property out of which the decree could be

38. ————— Necessity—Minor sons—Debt contracted to enable father to earn a maintenance. The expression "family necessity," justifying the sale of ancestral property, must be construed reasonably, and the head of the family and those dealing with him must be supported in transactions which, though in themselves diminishing the estate, yet prevent or tend to prevent still greater losses. A reasonable latitude must be allowed for the exercise of a manager's judgment, especially in the case of a father, though this must not be extended so far as to free the persons dealing with him from the need of all precautions where a minor son has an interest in the property. The fact that a mortgage or a bond, to pay off which ancestral property is sold, had some time to run is not a sufficient reason to disprove an otherwise apparent family necessity. The Hindu law recognizes a debt contracted by the father of a family to enable him to earn a maintenance as one contracted under pressure of a family necessity. BARAJI MAHADEVI v. KRISHNAJI DEVJI

Under the Hindu law subject to certain limited exceptions, the whole of the undivided estate of a joint family is liable in the hands of sons for the debts of their father. Accordingly, where ancestral property has passed out of the family either under a conveyance executed by the father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property, unless they show that the debts were of a kind for which they would not have been liable and that the purchasers had notice to that effect, and a purchaser at an execution-sale, being a stranger to the suit without such notice is not bound to make enquiry beyond what appears on the surface of the proceedings. 52. Right of son to set aside alienation—Immorality. Following a ruling of the Privy Council, Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall, 14 B. L. R. 187, it was held that a bond fide purchaser, for valuable consideration, of ancestral property sold in execution of a decree is not bound to go further back than to see that there was a decree, and that the property was liable to satisfy the decree. Where this is done, the heirs of the deceased judgment-debtor are not entitled to come in and set aside the proceedings and recover the property. A son's freedom from obligation to discharge his father's debt has respect to the nature of the debt and not to the nature of the property, whether ancestral or acquired. If the debt of the father had been contracted for any immoral purpose, the son might not be under any pious obligation to pay it. Attending nautches, and occasion-

The amount due by R to A, secured by the mortgage, was not disputed nor was it alleged that the debt was contracted for immoral purposes. The lower Courts decided the plaintiff's claim against A in the same way as his claim against P. Held (JAMES and MORTIMER AYER, JJ., dissenting), that the decision of the Privy Council in the case of *Girdharee Lal v. the plaintiff's claim was properly dismissed as against A, but if the sale was made in execution of the order for the enforcement of the mortgage, it could not bind the plaintiff, inasmuch as it was the duty of the mortgagee to make plaintiff a party to suit No. 35 and afford him an opportunity of redemption, but that, if the sale was set aside, the plaintiff could not claim to be placed in a better position than he would have occupied had the sale not taken place, and that, as his interest was bound set, while the power of the father to deal with ancestral immovable property has been curtailed. A personal obligation arising from the filial relation and independent of assets exists as well as an obligation attaching to the heritages in the hands of lineal descendants of the debtor. The question as to the extent of the son's liability is not one of contract, but the duty is an incident of inheritance. Assets available for the payment of a father's debts mean and include the whole estate in which the son by birth acquired rights. The validity of an alienation to a purchaser for consideration in Bombay, as in Madras, did not originate in any local usage, but in an exceptional doctrine established by modern jurisprudence. The duty of the son is incidental to the heritage and subsists from the inception of the son's interest therein. As a father can make a valid alienation of ancestral property so as to bind the son's interest, the law will execute the father's power for the benefit of creditors. There are substantial differences between a sale in execution for a money decree and at the date of the attachment; in the latter case whatever interest the mortgagor was, under any circumstances, competent to create and intended to create at the time of the mortgage. Although a son's interest may pass by a sale in execution of a decree in a suit to which he was no party, yet the son is not and that decision ought not to be followed in the Madras Presidency so far as it lays upon the son the duty of discharging his father's debt in his lifetime, or so far as it limits the son's right to question charges made by the father upon the family property to the case of debts immorally contracted. The rules laid down in Saravana Thero v. Mutlayi Ammal, 6 Mad. 371, should be followed, and when a decree is against the father for his separate debts, charge was created. Per MUTTUSWAMY AYYAR, J.—The power of a Hindu father to sell ancestral lands is limited. The rights of co-parceners in an undivided Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara, which consists of a father and sons, do not differ from those of co-parceners in a family which consists of undivided brothers, except so far as they are affected by the peculiar obligation which the Hindu law imposes on sons of paying their father's debts. The son's duty to pay his father's debts is according to the ancient text, a legal obligation because it was enforced compulsorily by Hindu kings through their Judges, who exercised an ecclesiastical as well as a secular jurisdiction. Since 1837 in this Presidency it has been held that a

is no legal basis for any distinction between a decree in which there is a direction for the sale of mortgaged property and a simple money decree. The interest that passes by a Court sale must be determined with reference to the decree that led to it, and cannot be determined by a future inquiry as to the character of the debt. The son's interest does not pass by reason of the direction for the sale of the mortgaged property. Per KRISHNAN, J.—A sale or mortgage by a father alone of ancestral property after the birth of a son, for the purpose of raising money, not for family necessity or benefit, but to ance, not of contract. According to the true doctrine of the Hindu law, the obligation of the son to pay his father's debt does not arise until the

a joint Mitakshara family (the family consisting of the father and minor son) raised money on the mortgage of certain family property, it not being proved, on the one hand, that there was legal necessity for raising the money, nor, on the other hand, that the money was raised or expended for improper purposes, or that the lender made any enquiry as to the purpose for which the money was required. Held, that, under such circumstances, a mortgagee could not enforce, by suit against the father and son, the mortgage itself during the father's lifetime, but the debt being an antecedent one, he would simply be entitled to a decree directing the debt to be raised out of the whole ancestral estate, including the mortgaged property. He would, assuming the minor to be the only son, also be entitled to a similar decree against the son after the father's death. Supposing the mortgagee under the above circumstances, to have obtained a decree against the father alone for payment and sale of the property, and at the sale to have himself become the purchaser, he could not be considered a bona fide purchaser for value, and would not be gage-bond in the position of an alienee by private sale. If the son has been a party to the suit in which the decree upon the mortgage-bond was obtained, he is concluded; but if he has not been a party to the suit he is not concluded, but must show that the original debt was contracted for illegal or immoral purposes, in order to recover his share of the property from the purchaser. Where the father has neither aliened nor mortgaged the family property, but it is sought by suit to make that property liable to satisfy a debt incurred by the father, the son as well as the father must be a party to the suit. When the creditor sues the father alone for a debt contracted by him alone, and in execution sells the right, title, and interest of the father only, the purchaser at this sale does not take the son's interest. RASIPHUL SINGH v. DEGNARAIN SINGH. I. L. R. 8 Cal. 517; 10 C. L. R. 489.

72. Joint family—Sale in execution of money-decree against father of Mitakshara family The mere fact of a decree being passed against the father only of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law will not lead necessarily to the conclusion that what was sold in execution of that decree is only the father's interest in the joint family property. Notwithstanding the decree being against the father only under certain circumstances, there may be a valid sale of a joint property belonging to the family in execution thereof. In execution of two money-decrees against A alone, the right, title, and interest of A in certain joint family property was sold, and the entire share of the joint family was taken possession of by the auction-purchaser. In a suit by the minor son and the wife of A, who with A constituted a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law, to recover possession of their shares in the property sold. Held, that, although the plaintiffs were not parties to the decrees in execution of which the sales took place, the mere fact of A being sued alone was not sufficient to justify the finding that only his right, title, and interest passed under the sales; and that, as the facts of the case showed that the decrees were passed with reference to transactions which clearly concerned the joint family, the whole of the share of the joint family in the properties sold passed to the auction-purchaser; the plaintiffs having failed to show that the debts, which were the foundation of the decrees in the execution of which the sales were held, were contracted for immoral purposes. *Umbla Prasad Tewary v. Thereupon the sons came in and objected to their interest in the property being sold in execution of a decree in a suit to which they were not parties, and, on their objection being disallowed, filed a suit against A and B to have it declared that their interest in the property was not liable to be sold to satisfy the decree. Held, that the debt in respect of which the decree had been passed having been contracted for lawful purposes, the judgment-creditor was entitled to execute his decree against the whole of the joint family property. Held, also, that the ruling in the case of *Deendyal Lal v. 74. Sale by one of several co-sharers in a joint estate—How far alienation by father of joint family property is binding on sons—Antecedent debts. Although no member of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara or Mithila law has authority, without the consent of his co-sharers, to sell or mortgage even his own share in order to raise money on his own account, and not for the benefit of the joint family, yet if a father does alienate even the whole joint property of himself and his sons, in order to pay off antecedent personal debts, the sons cannot avoid such alienation, unless they prove that the debts were immoral. But to make the alienation to this extent binding upon the sons who did not consent to it, it must be shown that it was made for the payment of antecedent debts, and not merely in consideration of a loan or of a payment made to the father on the occasion of his making the alienation. In the case of a voluntary sale, the purchase-money does not constitute an antecedent debt such as to render that sale binding on the sons, unless they prove the transaction to have been immoral. *HANUMAN KAMAT v. There is a distinction between such cases as this and cases in which a decree has been obtained against the father and the property sold, or cases in which the sons come into Court to ask for relief

In a suit against the members of a joint Hindu family upon a bond given by their father, and in which family property was hypothecated, no evidence was given on either side as to the circumstances in which the bond was given. There was no evidence to show that any inquiry had been made by the plaintiff as to the objects for which the bond was executed by the father. Held, that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff to show either that the money was obtained for a legal necessity or that he had made reasonable inquiries and obtained such information as would satisfy a prudent man that the loan was contracted to pay off an antecedent debt or for the other legal necessities of the family, and that no evidence having been given, the suit must be dismissed. *JAMNA v. mortgage giving possession with interest and costs—Son's liability to satisfy the decree as to interest and costs. The plaintiff's father mortgaged certain ancestral property for a limited term. A suit was brought on the mortgage against the father, and a decree was passed, directing the mortgaged property to be handed over to the mortgagee for a certain time, and awarding payment of interest and costs by the father. In execution of this decree, the mortgagee sought to recover the costs by sale of the property in question. Thereupon the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the property was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree against the father, on the ground that the debts contracted by the father were for immoral purposes, and that therefore the estate could not be bound by the decree at all. The Court of first instance found that the debts had not been incurred for any immoral purpose, and dismissed the suit. On appeal to the High Court:—Held, that under the decree passed against the father the interest and costs became a debt upon the whole estate, from which it could not escape, unless it was clearly made out that the debt was the result of fraud or immorality. Although the father alone was primarily liable for the fulfilment of the decree, still the debt was one which was rightly chargeable to the whole estate, and the sons would be liable, just as they would have been liable if the father had compromised the suit, unless the transaction were tainted with fraud or immorality. In a united family the father is capable of acting as the representative of the family, except in the case of borrowing for fraudulent or immoral purposes. In this case he entered into litigation, which resulted in loss to himself and the family which he represented, and he could make the family responsible for any loss so incurred. The judgment-creditor could also make them liable, although where the father desires to represent the whole estate he can do so yet he is not necessarily bound to do so, nor is the whole estate liable where he explicitly or impliedly binds only his own portion. *NARAYAN RAY DASODAR v. In the case of an execution-sale, the mere fact that the decree was a mere money-decree against the father as distinguished from one passed in a suit for the realization of a mortgage-security directing the property to be sold, is not a complete test. In a joint Mitakshara family consisting of a father and his minor son, the father mortgaged property belonging to the joint family. It was not proved that there was any legal necessity for the loan or any inquiry by the lender, nor that the loan was contracted for illegal or immoral purposes. In a suit by the mortgagee against the father and the son to enforce the mortgage, commenced within six years from the due date fixed by the mortgage: Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to have the security enforced as against the share of the mortgagor and also to a decree which would enable him to realise the debt by the sale of the share of the son in the ancestral property. *Luchmun Dass v. A Hindu father possessed of self-acquired property may deal with that property as he pleases, either by gift or by testamentary disposition; and his sons cannot dispute the disposition, even though it be in favour of a stranger. Any of the observations made in Tara Chand v. Reeb Ram (3 M. H. C. R. 50) which conflict with this proposition cannot now be regarded as good law. A father may leave his self-acquired property to descend to his sons as ancestral property, or, if he makes any disposition of it in favour of a son, he is at liberty to preserve for it the quality of ancestral property. Whether in any given case the property was intended to pass to the son as ancestral or as self-acquired property is a question of intention, turning on the construction of the instrument of gift. If there are no words indicating the contrary intention, the natural inference should be that the father intended the sons to take his property as their ancestral estate. If partition is made by the father on the footing that the property is partible property, although there is in point of law a disposition made by the father, the intention of the father will be taken to be that the quality of the ancestral property shall remain. Plaintiff's father made voluntary gifts of certain property to the defendant after the date of plaintiff's birth. Plaintiff now sued to set these alienations aside, and to recover the property, one ground being that the property alienated was ancestral property in the hands of his father, in which plaintiff had acquired an interest by birth, and that his father had, in consequence, no power to make the alienations. The whole of the property in question had been self-acquired, originally, by plaintiff's paternal grandfather, who had disposed of it by will to his three sons, of whom plaintiff's father was one. Plaintiff, however, contended that, notwithstanding this fact, the property had the quality of ancestral property in his father's hands. From the terms of the will it appeared that the testator intended his sons to take the property in severalty, but in other respects the dispositions contained in the will were consistent with the ordinary rules of inheritance under the Hindu law. There were no words in the will indicating any intention that the sons should hold their shares free from the incidents of ancestral property. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to recover. NAGALINGAM PILLAI v. RAMACHANDRA TEVAR (1901)

But it is not always possible to fix the line which separates accretions to the husband's estate from income held in suspense in the widow's hands, as to which she has not determined whether or not she will spend it. Where, however, both the family property and property purchased by the widow out of savings from her income were alienated by her, with the object of changing the succession:—Held, that accretion was clearly established, and that the after-purchases were inalienable by her for any purpose that would not justify alienation of the —

8. ——— Inheritance to property purchased by Hindu widow out of the income of her estate. When a widow, not spending the income of her widow's estate in the property which belonged to her husband when living, has invested such savings in property held by her without making any distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases, the prima facie presumption is that it has been her intention to keep the estate one and entire, and that the after-purchases are an increment to the original estate. The authority upon this matter is found in Iridut Koer v. Hansbutti Keerani, I. L. R. 10 Cal. 324: L. R. 10 I. A. 150, where a widow having made no distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases, the latter were held inalienable by her for any purpose not justifying alienation of the former. *SHEOLOCHUN SINGH v. 9. ——— Accumulations by Hindu widow—Accumulations—Period up to which they may be dealt with—Legacy to Hindu widow. The right of a Hindu widow to the income and accumulations of her husband's estate arising subsequently to his death is absolute, and is not affected by the fact that she may receive them in a lump sum; but whether she receives them as they fall due or after they have accumulated in the hands of others, her right is the same. The question to be sought for in determining her right to deal with such income and accumulations of income is one of intention. If she has invested her savings in such a manner as to show an intention to augment her husband's estate, she cannot afterwards deal with such investments, except for reasons which would justify her dealing with the original estate; but if she has evinced no such intention, she can, at any time during her life, deal with the profits. Where she invests her income, making a distinction between the investments and the original estate, she can at any time thereafter deal with such investment, save in the case of the purchase of other property as a permanent investment. But should she invest her savings in property held by her without making any distinction between the original estate and the after-purchases, the prima facie presumption is that it has been her intention to keep the estate one and entire, and that the after-purchases are an increment to the original estate. *GIRISH CHUNDER ROY v. The other three plots (Nos 497, 498 and 499) were relinquished by Radhabai in favour of the defendant, as she was unable to pay the Government assessment. The plaintiff was the son of Venkatesh, and was born after these transactions. After the sale and relinquishment in favour of the defendants Bhimabai died, then Venkatesh, and in 1889 Radhabai died. In 1897 the plaintiff brought the present suit, as reversionary heir of Govind Bhagwant against the defendant, to recover possession of the five plots of land alienated to him by Radhabai. Held, that the sale of the two plots Nos. 495 and 496 by Radhabai to the defendant was good, and the plaintiff was not entitled to recover them. profits from her death. The defendants were the Deputy Commissioner as representing the Court of Wards, into whose charge the vendee's estate had come, and the purchaser from the Court of Wards of the greater portion of the property in suit. The defence was that the alienation was made for legal necessity, and that the suit was barred by the decision in the pre-emption suit, which operated as res judicata. Both Courts below found on the facts that the item of Rs. 17,080 was justified by legal necessity, and that the advance of the sum in cash as part of the consideration was not proved. Held, by the Judicial Committee, that the defendants claiming as they did under the vendee, and standing therefore in no higher position than his, were not entitled to base a claim to the property upon an order made in the vendee's favour, but subsequently set aside; under the circumstances the doctrine of legal necessity could not be extended to the item for interest. There should be a decree for possession and for the balance of mesne profits after deducting the Rs. 17,080 for which the property was liable. Held, also, that all that was in issue in the former suit was the right of pre-emption as to the widow's interest only in the property, and that the effect of the deed of sale on the reversion could not properly have been made a ground of attack in that suit; the present suit was therefore not barred by s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. *DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF KHERI v. sioner to have sale declared void beyond her lifetime—Widow not availing herself of protection of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act. A childless Hindu widow, having succeeded to the estate of her father-in-law, sold a portion of it in order to pay off his debts. The estate was situate in a district in the Presidency of Bombay subject to the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879). The plaintiff as reversioner sued for a declaration that the sale was void beyond the lifetime of the widow. to avail herself of the relief afforded by the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act any more than of the provisions of the Limitation Act. The moral obligation which rested upon her to pay the debts of her father-in-law justified the sale. BHAG BABAJI v. JOPALA MANIPATI

In execution of a decree against the holder (by custom of primogeniture) of an impartible zamindari, who was a member of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law, his "right, title and interest" in the estate was sold in 1876. By the law as then interpreted such a holder had only a limited interest, and, except for special justifiable causes (of which the debt on which the above decree was obtained was not one), no power of alienation beyond his lifetime. 1. ——— Usages among dancing girls (naikins)—Usage as a source of law—Functions of Courts of law and of the Legislature in

The practices of an abandoned class are, no doubt, a usage in the sense of a tolerably uniform series of acts, but they do not therefore spring from a consciousness of compulsion, but rather from mere habit, imitation, and ignorance. Such usage is not a law, for over it premed recognize certain principles as essential to the common welfare, it will no longer lend its sanction to sectional practices at variance with the principles thus recognized. It is only according to the standards of the Hindu law that a usage has coercive force amongst Hindus; and what the Hindu law is, must, for the purposes of secular justice, depend on the general sense of the Hindu community. Although at one time in India the existence of companies of temple women may have been thought not so repugnant to the essential principles of the Vedic Code as to prevent their recognition as a source of law for themselves, it is not so at pre-not by repetition become a customary law. A custom, in order not to constitute it such, but to requisite degree of maturity. It is the function of the State to enforce it when it is ascertained and pronounced upon by the Courts of law. Judicial decisions by which customs in India have been recognized are not to be regarded in precisely the same way as judicial decisions with reference to customs in England. In England what the Courts have definitely propounded becomes by that very process a part of the common law, that is, of the law deriving its force from the custom of the realm or of the whole community. But in India it is usage, as such, to which the Courts are commanded to give effect. A custom, however, may be a usage and abandoned and its recognition a usage can community the commi changing phases, or else the behest of the sovereign will eventually be defeated. As the mind of the community becomes enlightened, its legal convictions will change, and this will constitute a change in its common law, as that law must from time to time be recognized and recorded in the Courts. *MATHURA NAIKIN v. ## II. IMPARTIBILITY.

Impartible estate—Parti-
Alto A custom of impartibility must be proved in order to control the operation of any Hindu law of succession. The fact estate has not been partitioned for six or generations does not deprive the members of it to which it jointly belongs of their right of partition. DURRAYO SINGH v. DARI SINGH

Custom as to succession. That an estate is impartible implies that it is separate and so to be governed by the law applicable to separate succession. The general status of a Hindu family being divided, property which is joint will follow the course of succession. Since in documents a Hindu and in the Mitakshara itself it is usual to find the leading members of a class mentioned when it is intended to comprehend the whole class, a written statement of a family whereby an impartible estate passes, in the hands of the holder dying without issue, to his brother or his eldest son, need not be considered as limiting the collateral succession to the two named, but as providing generally that on the death of the holder the estate shall pass to his brother or his eldest son.

Mitakshara law. The plaintiff with B. S., the father of the defendant, who was in possession of an estate in which the defendant had a share, died without issue.

It was held that all his property should be forfeited to the Government. On the 16th April 1858, B. S. was arrested and was tried and convicted on a charge of rebellion, and sentenced to death. The sentence was carried out on the 21st April 1858, and an order was made on the same day by the Government that the estate should be granted to the Government for his maintenance, and was, by the terms of the order, to be distributed on the death of the defendant.

It was held that the estate was granted to the Government for his maintenance, and was, by the terms of the order, to be distributed on the death of the defendant.

which the estate was impartible and descendible, according to the law of primogeniture, on the male heirs of the original grantee; and that, by the Mitakshara law as modified, the plaintiff became on his birth co-owner with his father in the estate, and on his father's death became entitled to it, notwithstanding the sentence of confiscation pronounced against B. S. Held, on the case made by the plaintiff, that the estate was not shown to be inalienable; the fact that the grant was for maintenance, and to the male heirs of the original grantee, would not render it so. Held, on the case made in the written statement, that the Mitakshara law did not apply to the case; that law by which each son has by birth a property in the paternal or ancestral estate is inconsistent with the custom that the estate was impartible and descended to the eldest son. KAPILNATH SINGH v. DEO R. GOVERNMENT

4. — Presumption as to impartibility—Burden of proof—Deshgat vatan held by desai. In a suit for the partition of part of a deshgat vatan, brought by the younger brothers of a joint Hindu family against their eldest brother, the presumption is that the vatan is impartible, and that the estate is to be divided among the brothers.

It was held that the vatan had, contrary to the general Hindu law, been inherited by him alone. It was for the desai to show by evidence of the nature of the tenure of the vatan that it was impartible, or to show by evidence of family custom or of district, i.e., local custom, that impartibility attached to it, such evidence being strong enough to rebut the presumption of the prevalence of the general Hindu law. Where the defendant in a suit for the partition of a deshgat vatan held the hereditary office of desai, and the vatan was properly appertaining to the office, the decree for partition was accompanied by a decree for the appointment of a desai.

The plaintiff was the elder of the two, but the mother of the younger had been married by the zamindar before his marriage with the mother of the elder. In virtue of his seniority the elder brother claimed. their ancestral property descended as an impartible estate, to be possessed by the eldest son of the last inheritor, or descended as an ordinary estate, under the Hindu law, to be held jointly by the sons, each having the right to claim partition. The second of a joint family of three sons now sued the elder, the youngest being a co-defendant, but not taking either side. The evidence established a family custom that the ancestral property should descend as an impartible estate, and should be possessed by a single heir at a time, who should be the eldest son. All the lines of evidence, of differing degrees of value, converged towards the same result, the existence of this custom of impartibility, and of primogeniture. Perhaps no one of these lines, taken alone, would have been conclusive in favour of this right being established in the eldest son. But when the whole evidence was considered, the converging probabilities were conclusive to maintain the right claimed by the eldest son to exclusive possession. NITB PAL SINGH v. JAT PAL SINGH

Where such right does not in itself form a charge upon her husband's share or interest in the joint family property, yet, whenever it becomes necessary to enforce or preserve such right effectually, it may be made a specific charge on a reasonable portion of such joint family property, such portion not exceeding her husband's share or interest therein. Such right may also, in certain cases, be enforced against the transferee of joint family property. Manilal v. Baitara, I. L. R. 17 Bom. 393, discussed. The deceased husband of defendant executed a promissory note as a surety, and after his death a decree was obtained against the defendant, his widow, on the promissory note. The decree-holder attached a house, which had belonged to the deceased and in which the widow was residing, brought it to sale and purchased it. On his endeavouring to obtain possession the widow resisted on the ground that she had a right of residence in the house during her lifetime and could not, therefore, be ejected. Held, that the decree-holder was entitled to be given possession of the house and that the widow had no right of residence therein. *JAYANTI SUBBIAH v. Questions having been referred to the Full Bench: Held, (1) that independently of the debt arising from the original transaction, the decree against the father by its own force created a debt as against him, which his sons, according to the Hindu law, were under an obligation to discharge, unless they showed that the debt was illegal or immoral; (2) that if the suit had been brought on the original cause of

3. ——— Form of creation—Perpetuity—Trust—Gift and inoperative devise. A Hindu by will devised certain property, consisting of a family dwelling-house and land, to trustees for ever, for the residence, maintenance, and performance of the worship of certain family idols, and appointed his sons and their descendants in the strict male line to be shebais of the idols for ever, making provision for their residence in the family dwelling-house; the will also contained a clause restraining any partition, division, or alienation of the property so dedicated to the worship of the idols. The testator appointed the trustees executors of his will, and by a codicil bequeathed legacies to various members of his family. In a suit against the executors to recover a legacy so bequeathed—Held, that the devise of the property to the idols was void and inoperative as being a settlement in perpetuity on the male descendants of the testator and for their use, and not a real dedication for the worship of the idols. of 1817. The important principle to be observed by the Courts in dealing with the constitution and rules of religious brotherhoods attached to Hindu temples is to ascertain, if possible, the special laws and usages governing the particular community whose affairs have become the subject of litigation and to be guided by them. The superintending authority over religious endowments exercised by the old rulers of the country passed to the British Government, and Madras Regulation VII of 1817 merely defined the manner in which that power was to be thenceforth exercised. METTU RAMALINGA SATHUPATI v. The High Court modified the decree, giving the plaintiff possession of certain chutters and gardens built or purchased out of funds remitted from Malirra, and declaring him entitled to an account of a sum admitted to have been remitted from Tirpatal, but holding that he had failed to make out possession of the muth, temple,

And that it was not shown that any change had been effected in the original constitution of the community. Held, that the nature of the relation between the muths at Tirpatal and Benares was that the former fed the establishment at the latter, the object of which was to afford facilities to pilgrims and others wishing to pay their devotions at Benares. The result was that the establishment at Tirpatal collected alms and remitted them to Benares, producing complicated exchange transactions between the two establishments. Held, that the plaintiff had failed to establish either that he was the

13. — Succession to a sheer of a muth—Nomination requiring assumption of the character of a sannyasi—Time fixed by decree for assumption of that character—Enlargement on appeal of that time—Evidence of custom. The plaintiff sued for a declaration of his right as sheer of a muth and for possession of the property of the muth. The plaintiff alleged that the immemorial custom with reference to the succession to the office of sheer was that the sheer for the time being nominated his successor, and that, failing such nomination the disciples assembled at the place where he died elected his successor, and that the person so nominated became sheer by virtue of such nomination alone. The plaintiff's case was that he was nominated by the late sheer, although the nomination was not concurred in by the disciples, and that the late sheer had initiated him and directed him to become a sannyasi a day or two after his initiation, and that he was accordingly entitled to the rights and privileges of sheer. The plaintiff obtained a decree, which was, however, made contingent upon his assuming the character of a sannyasi within the period of four months. The defendant preferred an appeal against this decree, and the plaintiff preferred an appeal praying for the enlargement of the period fixed, within which he was to become a sannyasi pending the disposal of the appeal preferred by the defendant. On the plaintiff's appeal: Held, that the Court had power to extend

In 1867 a predecessor in title of the plaintiff had sued unsuccessfully to recover certain property of the muth from the defendant, alleging another cause of action than his status as a married man and his misappropriation of the muth property; and in that suit it was established that the head of the muth for the time being had the right to appoint his successor, and that such appointment was not subject to confirmation by the zamindar. It appeared that the trusts of the muth had been violated and the income misapplied, and that there was no qualified disciples in whom the right of succession had vested, and that the members of the plaintiff's family were the only persons interested head of the muth to his brother for his maintenance—Sut by a successor to recover the land—Yadasts from revenue officials—Evidence—Limitation Act (XV of 1877), s. 10. In 1544 a village was granted to the head of a Gosami muth to be enjoyed from generation to generation, and the deed of grant provided that the grantee was "to improve the muth, maintain the charity and be happy." The office of head of the muth was hereditary in the grantee's family. In 1886 an inam title-deed was issued to the then head of the muth, whereby the village was confirmed to him and his successors tax-free to be held without interference so long as the conditions of the grant were duly fulfilled. Yadasts addressed by talukdars to the then head of the muth in 1872 and 1882 were put in evidence to show what the object of the grant was. It was found, regard being had to usage, that the trusts of the institution were the upkeep of the muth, the feeding of pilgrims, the performance of worship, the maintenance of a watershed and the support of the descendants of the grantee. From before 1840 it had been usual for the head of the muth for the time being to make grants to his brothers or younger sons for their maintenance. In 1842 the father of the present plaintiff, being then the head of the muth granted certain lands in the village above referred to to his younger brother, the deed of grant being in terms absolute. The grantee died about thirty years before the suit and the lands in question came into the possession of his widow (defendant No 1) and a mortgagee from her (defendant No 2), respectively. In 1863 the plaintiff's father placed certain other lands in possession of defendant No 3 who paid rent therefor and received pottahs for some years from the plaintiff. In a suit by the plaintiff for possession of the lands in the possession of the defendants it was pleaded, inter alia, that the grant of 1842 was binding on him, and that defendant No 3 had a right of permanent occupancy. Held, (i) that the suit was not barred by limitation; (ii) that the yadasts

1. Right of widow to reside in family-house. Maintenance—Obligation of sons to provide her with residence. Although a Hindu widow is not entitled to reside in the family house, she is entitled to reside in a house of her own.

2. Right of son to eject widow—Doctrine of factum valet. A Hindu died leaving a widow and an adopted son, who continued, after his death, to reside in the same dwelling-house in which they had resided with the deceased during his lifetime, and which formed a portion of his estate. The son being an infant, the widow had the management of the house, and let a portion of it to tenants at a monthly rent. Subsequently the son sold the house, as his property by

3. Co-parcener's widow—Right of co-parcener's widow to live in the dwelling house—Disagreement between widows, no ground for the eviction of either. Under the general rule of Hindu law prevailing in the Bombay Presidency, a co-parcener's widow is, in the absence of any special circumstances, entitled to reside in the family dwelling-house. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of a portion of the family dwelling-house in the actual possession and enjoyment of the defendant, who was the childless widow of his undivided brother. The plaintiff had offered her a residence in another house on condition of her vacating the part of the house in dispute. Pending the suit, the plaintiff died and was subsequently represented by his widow. Both the lower Courts awarded the plaintiff's claim on the ground of disputes between the two widows and also on the ground of the inconvenience and unhealthiness of the part of the house in the defendant's possession. The plaintiff's widow was not entitled to reside in the family house, and that there were no special

4. Right of a widow to reside in the family dwelling-house—Sale of dwelling-house in execution of a decree obtained against the managing members of family on a debt incurred for family purposes. A house, being ancestral property of a Hindu family, was sold in execution of a decree by which the decree-amount was constituted a charge on such property. The debt sued on had been incurred for the benefit of the family by the co-parceners for the time being, but since the death of such co-parcener's father—Held, that the widow of the latter, who resided in the said house during her husband's lifetime, was not entitled as against a purchaser for value in good faith under such decree (but with notice that she resided and during her husband's life had resided in that house, and still claimed to reside there) to continue to reside for life in such portion of the house sold as she resided in subsequent to her husband's death. *Venkatammal v. 14. Attestation of deed, effect of. In 1873, R, a Hindu, executed a deed of gift of his immovable property to his daughter M (defendant No. 1). The deed was attested by the plaintiff. In 1878 R mortgaged to the plaintiff some of the land comprised in the deed of gift. R died in that year, and in 1882 his grandson conveyed the equity of redemption to the plaintiff, who was already in possession of the mortgaged land as mortgagee. In the year 1883, the plaintiff being dispossessed by M and the second defendant, to whom she had sold the land, he brought the present suit to recover possession. The defendants relied upon the gift. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to possession. At the time of the mortgage to him in 1878 R had not completed his gift to M by giving possession. He was therefore in a position to give the plaintiff a good title. It had not been shown that M had ever been treated as the owner of the equity of redemption. Held, also, that the circumstance that the plaintiff attested the deed of gift in 1873 could not affect his title, as the gift had not been completed by delivery of possession. *ABAJI GANGADHAR v. Shortly after the execution of this document, the defendant was put into possession of the lands, and she admittedly continued in possession down to the commencement of this suit in 1883. The plaintiff, who were the minor children of P, now sought to recover these lands from the defendant, alleging that on the death of their grandfather G the lands had devolved by inheritance upon his son P (their father), and contending that the latter had no power to make a gift of these to the defendant. The lower Court found that the question of P's competency to give the lands did not arise, as they had already been given to the defendant by his father G, and that P was simply an instrument in

The daughter was put in possession, was dispossessed in 1858, and died in 1862. Under the terms of the deed, the property then went to the survivor of the two grandsons, who in 1864 sold his rights and interests in the property. In 1865 the purchaser brought a suit and recover possession from the defendants. His representatives now sued for mesne profits of the property from 1860 to 1865. 8. ——— Husband and wife—Infant wife—Marriage. According to Hindu law, after marriage, a husband is the legal guardian of his wife's person and property, whether she is a major or minor. The marriage of an infant being under the Hindu law a legal and complete marriage, the

9. ——— Right of relatives (after parents are dead) to custody of child—Nearest paternal relatives—Selection of guardian by Court. The claims of relatives to the guardianship of a minor stand upon quite a different footing from those of parents. The nearest paternal relatives have no legal right to the immediate custody of a child on the death of its parents. In the absence of father or mother or guardian appointed by the father, the selection of a guardian for a Hindu minor is to be made by the Court, as it represents the ruling power. *KISTO KISSOR NEOGY v. Right of father to give his daughter in marriage—
Conduct of father forfeiting such right—Sue by a father to restrain his wife from giving their daughter in marriage without his consent The plaintiff and R, the second defendant, were husband and wife belonging to the Prabhu caste, and lived together in the house of the first defendant, who was R's father, until the year 1850. In 1877 a daughter, S, had been born to them. In 1880 the plaintiff was convicted of theft and sentenced to two years' imprisonment. At the end of his term of imprisonment he did not return to live with his father-in-law, but went to reside in his own father's house, where in 1884 he requested his wife R to join him with their daughter R refused, and she and S continued to live in the house of the first defendant, her father. The plaintiff then married a second wife. In November 1885, S having attained nine years of age—an age at which it is customary for Prabhus to seek husbands for their daughters demanded his daughter S from the defendants, who, however, refused to deliver the girl to the plaintiff. In May 1886, the plaintiff filed this suit

The plaintiff, who was then a minor, claimed through his natural father, R, to be C's heir. This claim was disputed by P on behalf of his son, the defendant, who was also a minor. In 1863, pending legal proceedings between them, R and P compromised the dispute, and agreed that the muth and the property appertaining to it should be divided between the plaintiff and the defendant in equal shares. In the present suit the plaintiff thought to set aside the compromise made on his behalf by his natural father, R, on the ground that R had no authority to make it, and that there was no necessity for it. Held, that the plaintiff's natural father made a proper compromise on his behalf

I. AUTHORITIES ON LAW OF INHERITANCE.

1. — Law in Western India—Comparative authority of Mitakshara and Mayukha in South Maratha country. In Western India, on

of the Courts and oral statements of persons learned in the Hindu law of this Presidency. Babaji Kashinath v. Anandray Bhaskar, unreported, commented upon. KRISHNAJI VYANKTESH v. PANDURANG. PANDURANG v. KRISHNAJI VYANKTESH

2. — Commentaries and text-books—Mitakshara—Mayukha—Usage. The commentaries and text-books embody, in many instances, the rules formed and enforced by custom, but custom, even on Hindu principles, may and must have power without their aid. They do not govern the process; it they are la sense and rules are but the exact extent of the reception, of any law book is governed by usage. In the Maratha country the Mitakshara is the principal authority upon Hindu law; but in doubtful cases it may properly be construed by the light of the Mayukha, the usage of the country having adopted the latter as well as the former. This course was followed in Vinayak Anandray v. Lakshmbai, 1 Bom. 118, where a different construction of the Mitakshara was allowed to prevail in Bombay from that which had been adopted for Bengal. BHAGIRTHAI v. KALNEJIRAY. I. L. R. 11 Bom. 285

3. — Comparative authority of the Mitakshara and the Mayukha in the Ratnagiri District. The Ratnagiri District forms part of the Maratha country where the doctrines of the Mitakshara are paramount, and where the Mayukha, notwithstanding the eminent position it has gained, is still a secondary authority. 2. — Lands transferred to district having different law of succession—Presumption against change of law. When lands situate in one district are arbitrarily transferred by Government to another having a different system of law in matters of succession, the owners of those lands cannot be presumed to change their observances with their districts; the presumption being against such change. PIRTHEE SINGH v. COURT OF WARDS. 23 W. R. 272

In a case where the question was as to the right of succession to an estate held by S, the common ancestor of the plaintiff and the defendant, which estate was formerly within zillah Beerbhoom and subject to the law of the Bengal Presidency, but was held the case was to be governed by the Mitakshara law, as being that in force in zillah Bhagalpore. The Privy Council remanded the case for a decision on the effect of the transfer, and as to whether the succession thereby became regulated by the Mitakshara law, or whether, by reason of any local or family custom, it continued to be governed by the Dayabhaga. ## 3. SPECIAL LAWS.

(a) COORG.

1. ——— Inheritance, law of—Mitakshara law. The ex-Rajah of Coorg died in England in 1859, leaving considerable moveable property which he had himself acquired and accumulated, chiefly by means of his pensions and some ancestral jewels and ornaments. By his last will and testament he left all his property to trustees in trust to pay thereout certain legacies, and to divide the residue in certain proportions among various members of his family. Some difficulty having arisen after his death regarding the distribution of his estate, the Court of Chancery stated a case and propounded certain questions under 22 and 23 Vict.

propounded was—“What school of Hindu law would govern the succession to the estate of the deceased Rajah, and the rights and interests of the members of his immediate family with reference to question, the Court said that the doctrines of the Benares School of Hindu law, as laid down in the Mitakshara, should govern the decision of the case regarding the succession to the estate of the deceased Rajah, on the ground that the Mitakshara is the leading authority of Hindu law throughout Southern India as well as Benares, and that the Court had no reason to suppose that the doctrines of the Mitakshara had been in any way varied or altered by any text-book recognized as an authority in Coorg, although some variations prevail in various parts of Southern India. The Court were further of opinion that the doctrines of the same school of Hindu law would govern the case, supposing the Rajah died without having made any testamentary disposition of his property. The suc-

(b) CUTCHI MEMONS.

2. ——— Absence of special custom. In the absence of proof of any special custom of inheritance, the Hindu law of inheritance applies to Cutchi Memons. ASHABI v. TYEB HAJI RAHMATULLA. I. L. R. 9 Bom. 115

3. ——— Custom—Joint family—Joint and ancestral property. Cutchi Memons are governed by the Hindu law of inheritance in the absence of proof of special custom. A custom alleged to exist among Cutchi Memons of recognizing no difference between ancestral and self-acquired property held not proved. Four brothers of the Cutchi Memon common by carried on trade with capital inherited from their father. Large profits were made in the course of business. It was alleged that some of the profits were made by means of borrowed capital, and some arose out of a commission business in which the capital of the firm

The borrowed money was put into the general cash with the original capital. Held, that the whole property was ancestral. Augmentations which blend, as they accrue, with the original estate partake of the character of that estate. Moreover, the loans in question and the extension of business to which they led might have produced heavy losses instead of great profits, and the family property would have been liable to debts so incurred.

(c) JAINS

4. ———— Widow claiming separate property of husband. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, the rules of inheritance of the Jains must be taken to be the same as those of the orthodox Hindus in that part of the country in which the property is situate. Therefore, where the widow of a Jain claimed as heiress of her husband, who was separate in estate, property situate in a district in which the Mitakshara prevails:—Held, that she was entitled to succeed. *LALLA MAHABEER PERSHAD v.
